Fire hazards still a burning issue

by Joanne Davis
News Editor

In light of information revealed in last week's Pointer, the Stevens Point Public Protection Committee went on record urging the Board of Regents to correct the Residence Hall fire alarm system before the end of this semester.

Inoperative automatic fire alarms are not, however, the only fire-related hazard at UWSP.

The chain of events that occurred in the Hyer Hall fire several weeks ago revealed the inconsistent method by which fire extinguishers are checked in the Residence Halls.

A fire extinguisher was discovered inoperative when a student attempted to use it to extinguish the RA's room fire.

An inside source from Protective Services said, "Protective Services used to check the halls for protective/safety problems, but someone decided the RA's could do it. Now we only check them during Christmas break—if we have time."

"It's my understanding the fire extinguishers are checked by RA's; it's in their manuals," Don Burling, Manager of Protective Services said. "It's been an unwritten policy not to act like big brothers by walking the residence hall floors. But because of that system (extinguisher checks), one could easily be missed," he added.

But Harlan Hoffbeck, Director of the Physical Plant said, "Ultimately, residence life/Pete Armstrong is responsible for assuring checks on fire extinguishers." Hoffbeck also stood firm in his conviction that, "We're trying to teach RA's and directors responsibility. I don't know how the RA's are trained or where their priorities lie, nor do I know why the fire extinguisher wasn't charged."

Once the fire extinguisher was sent to maintenance for recharging, Don Burling said, "We had to call maintenance ourselves to check on it; it took about a day and a half to get one filled."

In response to the delay in the work order on the extinguisher, Hoffbeck said, "I don't know why there wasn't a fire extinguisher readily available for exchange. I will check into it."

In addition to the uncertainty of responsibility in regards to fire extinguishers, there is the ongoing concern about the "DeBot circle." This circular lane is a fire lane; parking is prohibited.

Burling expressed his concern. "The DeBot circle has always been a problem area that's been abused."

The area, a convenient but illegal parking spot for residents, visitors, and pizza delivery vehicles, causes problems for parking enforcement, and parked cars decrease the safety of the area.

The City of Stevens Point fines and tows vehicles parking in fire lanes in public areas. UWSP has a 'no tow' policy.

"Zeke" Torzewski, the Assistant Chancellor for Business Affairs, insisted, "You can't have 3,500 students without having a few who refuse to follow the rules." He went on to say, "We took parking enforcement away from Protective Services because of their over-enforcement without reasonable judgement." Torzewski feels students should not be penalized for the lack of parking on the campus.

Burling maintained, "We're here to report safety problems and to enforce the law, but we're limited in action. The University has a no towing policy, so what can you do?"

The implication is that cars repeatedly parked in the DeBot circle—a fire lane—cannot be towed, only ticketed.

Torzewski said, "The fire engines won't be damaged moving those cars, they know how to run the cars over. Towing cars from the circle would be an unreasonable tow."

Torzewski added, "You can never be 100 percent safe. Protective Services' long suit is not safety; not towing those cars is a judgement call I'm comfortable with."

Date Rape

20% of female students are victims

by Joanne Davis
News Editor

Date rape is among the least reported, least believed, and most difficult sexual assaults to prosecute, second only to spouse rape. At a date rape program held November 18 at UWSP, a panel of five professionals addressed specific areas concerning sexual assault.

The panel consisted of: Don Fadner, philosophy professor; Christy Carter, Counseling Center; Deb Meyer, Protective Services; Jean Banks, Sexual Assault Services; and Stu Whipple, Counseling Center.

The category known as date rape is described as forced intercourse by someone with whom one has had a relationship through, for example, good friends or dating.

The report rate for this offense is very low, often leaving offenders unpunished and free to commit the crime again.

Date rape most often occurs in the private home of the victim or the assailant; alcohol and loud music are frequently part of the scenario as it seems effective in covering up the victim's voice. This type of rape often follows when the victim refuses sexual advances.

The results of the Ms. Magazine Campus Project on Sexual Assault show one quarter of women in college today have been the victims of rape or attempted rape, and almost 90 percent of them knew their assailants.

Jean Banks suggested if women are in a potential sexual assault situation they should: be assertive, don't give out mixed messages, be rude, lie if necessary, forcefully push the assailant, or induce vomit to distract the assailant.

Deb Meyer affirmed that sexual assault victims are not always female. "We have had young men assaulted on this campus; usually these assaults against men involve much more physical violence and mutilation," Meyer said.

Meyer also explained the relatively new category of fourth degree sexual assault. The category curtails such things as grabbing or touching a victim without his/her consent. "If the person is reported to the authorities, hopefully you can stop someone with their inappropriate behavior before it becomes worse," Meyer said.

Stu Whipple, in regard to alcohol and the assailant, said, "You need to protect yourself first when it comes to dealing with an intoxicated person. Remember, the majority of violent behavior in our society is alcohol related."

Don Fadner went on to say, "Men's thoughts are often 'delusions of grandeur'. Men's sense of being a 'hero' is mastering any situation they are in. The desire is the hunt and the ## Student rewarded $40 by Risk Mgt.

by Susan Higgins

A UWSP student received a $40 reward in late October for reporting an act of vandalism that occurred on September 8 to Protective Services.

The student, who wished to remain anonymous, saw two students shaking a light pole west of Roach Hall and called Protective Services. The pole however, was not damaged at that time, according to Don Burling, Security Supervisor.

Some time later the student called back and reported the same two individuals were again shaking the pole. The student, who was looking through binoculars, described what the vandals were wearing to the dispatcher at Protective Services. He also saw the pair knock over the light pole, causing some $460 in damages.

Aided by the description given to them, Protective Services apprehended the vandals on Reserve St. near Colman field. The vandals were then referred to the Conduct Board and restitution was made for the damages.

The student who reported the incident was rewarded through the UW System Risk Manage-

LRC hours costing students study time

Here's the scenario. You have a big test next Tuesday, you haven't even started to look at the material, and you can't study in your noisy apartment. The first two parts are variables you have little control over, but the third is something you can take care of.

The first place to check would be one of the quiet study lounges in any one of the university centers. If this doesn't appeal to you, there is always the old fallback, the library. However, this solution is not as popular or as available as it used to be.

There has been a great deal of dissatisfaction over the hours of operation for the LRC. Students are complaining that the library is not open during many of the peak study times. The area of greatest concern is the weekend hours.

Now, for many people, whether the library is open on weekends or not is not of great concern. But, believe it or not, there are students at UWSP who do not spend their entire weekend propped up on the bar of one of the city's social establishments. Some people do make a valiant effort at getting some studying done. The problem here seems to be that the LRC is not open during the times they wish to study.

Under the current hours, the LRC is open until 4:30 p.m. on Friday afternoons, and the After Hours room is open until 8:30 in the evening. On Saturday, the LRC operates from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. with no hours for the After Hours room. The common complaint is that these hours are simply not enough.

Many of the diligent studiers would gladly stay at the library on a Friday or Saturday night until 10 or 11 o'clock. But under the current library hours, this isn't possible. Is it fair to exclude these people from a facility their tuition helps support? And, for what reason is the library being closed at these times?

I know, many of you are saying it takes people to staff the LRC and who wants to work on a Friday or Saturday night? A good point, but a better point would be that the students who staff the LRC are being paid for their time. Now, many jobs carry some non-traditional hours with them, but nonetheless, the hours must be worked if the worker wishes to hold the job and get paid for it. Also, I really think that it would be possible to find some students who would be more than willing to have this opportunity to earn some extra money.

But, besides staff problems, another thing strikes me as quite odd. Over the past two years, huge amounts of money have been spent on remodeling the LRC to its current state. It seems to me that if you were going to spend this much money on a facility, you would want to keep it open as often as possible so you could see that the money spent was serving a purpose.

I'm not saying that opening the LRC for 24 hours like some colleges do is the answer, but something has to be done to give students the opportunity to use their library when they really need to. Is it fair to charge thousands of dollars a year for a college tuition and then tell a student the facilities he needs to aid his learning are not available when he most needs them? I'm sure you would agree that it is not.

This is a problem that must really be looked into. After all, learning takes place throughout the entire day, not just when the library is open.

Plastic money, it's not just for the rich anymore

by Linda Butkus
Staff reporter

UWSP juniors, seniors, and grad students may be qualified for a Citibank MasterCard or Visa card to help start a good credit history. "One of the main benefits of the students having credit cards, and Visa or MasterCard in particular, is that we are becoming a cashless society and it's very important to have a credit card," said Michael Fromm, account executive of College Credit Card Corporation.

"Not only for convenience sake, but in the case of emergencies," he added.

Citibank, the nation's largest bank, is offering MasterCard/Visa through a special college program where students can call a 24 hour toll-free hotline to request their card applications over the phone. "It's easier to get a credit card when you're in school than it would be once you graduate and get a full-time job because the requirements are so lenient with this program," Fromm said. The two main aspects of the program include the convenience of having the card and the importance of building a credit history, said Fromm. "The main aspect of the program is that because the Visa/MasterCard are all the other cards we represent are so easy to obtain through this program, it's the best way a student has to start establishing their credit history. Otherwise, they get out of school and have to really work very hard to establish a credit rating," Fromm added.

Students can apply for a Citibank card even if they're not currently employed or do not have a credit rating by filling out the application and enclosing a copy of one of the following:

- Student ID with current enrollment sticker
- Paid tuition bill for current semester
- Class schedule for current semester
- Recent bank statement showing savings of at least $1,500
- Recent paycheck stub
- Letter of verification of employment from your employer
- 1984 W-2, 1040 or 1040A tax form

- Letter/Certification from registrar's office verifying student enrollment.

Since establishing credit by college students has recently been a hot topic, the College Credit Card Hotline has been featured in Newsweek on Campus, Business Week, Glamour, the New York Times and numerous college and university newspapers. "The main point is that students are being given a great amount of consideration for the fact that they are making a four year investment into their future by going to college," said Fromm.

Networking at work

by Karen Hettich
Staff reporter

Only 15 percent of all available jobs are listed in the newspapers. Where, then, are the other 85 percent of jobs filled? The adage, "It's not what you know, but who you know that counts" is appropriate here.

To get and keep the job of your dreams, certainly it's "...what you know..." that counts. But in looking for that job, "...who you know..." can help. Now is the time to get out from behind your books and your desk and meet people. Meeting and getting to know people can help you create a network.

You can network at college and at the health club, when you shop, when you volunteer for an organization, when you join a professional association.

Networking is more than making friends. Networking is based on the premise that everyone you meet can be a valuable resource to you, and that you can become a valuable resource to them.

The people you know know other people, and someone might know of a job that's just right for you, or might think of you when a job becomes available.

Others can open the door for you. Opening doors is fun and rewarding. Think of the times you have opened doors for others; know that they will enjoy helping you out, too.

Networking is an exchange of ideas and resources. As a novice, you probably don't feel like you have much to offer in exchange. But you do. Be a help to the other person to the fullest of your ability.

Look forward a moment. How will a future employer pick you out of a crowd? Employers work. Often employers go to their friends for recommendations. You have a support group of friends, relatives and cohorts. They are your personal referral network, people you already know who might serve as contacts.

From your research, you also have a comprehensive list of prospective people, organizations and situations which seem most likely to offer the kinds of work you desire. There is one other way to expand your network—the information interview.

This type of interview is a brainpicking session that lets you talk to experts in your field. It's always exciting for people who have "arrived" to feel that they can teach someone else something. Show that you have a willingness to learn. At the end of your interview, ask the person if her or she can recommend someone else they feel can help. Also, your experts can network back to their friends, your potential employers.

Even if the person you want to talk with doesn't want to see you, you can benefit. The worst thing the person can say is, "I'm too busy, try so-and-so." Even that will extend your network.

Getting your network going may be one of the most important steps in the job search you can take. The more people who know you are looking for a job, the better your chances of finding that one perfect for you out of the 85 percent that will never be advertised.

achievement is the score." He proposed that a man's inappropriate sexual behavior often starts on a low key level and gradually works its way up to the level of a rapist in his search for higher and better satisfaction — if he is not brought back to reality.

"Women are socialized not to have anger," said Christy Carter. "Women try to nurture the assailant instead — by blaming themselves." Carter stressed that denial of the experience and what she calls depersonalization are clues that a person has probably experienced some form of assault and needs help or support.

Depersonalization refers to taking the 'person' out of the situation. "We try to step aside and look at the assault rationally; we withdraw and become socially isolated," Carter said.

The panel agreed that expressing anger after an assault is natural, as long as it is not expressed chaotically. Guilt, anger, shame, denial, and lack of trust are all common after-effects. They urge victims to seek help from any of the available offices on campus and in the community.

The program was sponsored by the Women's Resource Center.

A survivor's story

"Jean," a UWSP student and victim of an attempted rape recounts her experience: "It was nine o'clock at night and I was walking home from studying. I was on a campus sidewalk; I saw this guy way off walking towards me on the sidewalk. I never really thought about it being unsafe to walk alone. Suddenly he had his hand over my mouth. He grabbed me and threw me on the ground. I guess I was screaming...he yelled 'shut up bitch!' He kept hitting me, trying to make me be quiet. It was near a building and finally someone heard my screams; the guy got away and was never caught. I was knocked unconscious."

This experience put "Jean" in the hospital for a week. Counseling with a social worker for a year after the attempted rape and two more months of sessions with a psychiatrist helped "Jean" deal with her feeling of fear and anger after her attack. "My parents were extremely supportive and so was my boyfriend at the time. The tensions finally split me and my boyfriend apart though," she said.

"It always happens to someone else, you never think it will happen to you. It's hard now to realize whether I'm being cautious or just paranoid. It's really unfair we have to live our lives being so cautious as women."

CAMPUS BRIEFS

CLS, CNR, COFA fail to meet or beat the challenge

By Bob Wrzinski
Staff reporter

The United Way challenge made by COPS Dean Joan North has come to a close on campus. This was the first time in many years that a challenge such as this was made. The College of Professional Studies came in first with 48 percent participation, followed by the College of Letters and Science with 28 percent, the College of Natural Resources with 24 percent and the College of Fine Arts with 21 percent.

The percentages are approximations and represent that portion of employees who donated money for United Way in their colleges. The challenge was to try and get the highest percentage of people to give; this way a larger college would not have an advantage (monetarily) over a smaller one.

Joan North, Dean of COPS, made the challenge to the college Deans and encouraged them to accept. In addition to being a humanitarian gesture, Dean North said it "would be a good way for the colleges to visibly work together." Dean North kept a graph showing the progress of the challenge. Her effort paid off since it nearly doubled the response of her people from last year.

All of the Deans felt the challenge was a good idea, but felt there would have been more interest shown if the challenge would have been more widely publicized. The challenge was printed in The Pointer, but some Deans thought a more direct approach to the people concerned, like an insert with their checks, would have provided a bigger impact.

The total participation percentages, with the exception of COPS, all closely resemble the figures for the previous years.

Oddly enough, Dean Thoyre, whose CLS placed second, didn't accept Dean North's challenge. He felt that the strength was with Dean North since she had enthusiasm and persuasiveness on her side. Jokingly referring to her rappelling experience he said, "I would have to question the wisdom of anybody who would accept the challenge from someone who takes pleasure in throwing themselves off an 80 foot tower as she did." Asked why he thought they still came in second he said, "The challenge didn't fall on deaf ears. They must have gotten the information from somewhere else."

The end figures for the challenge aren't indicative of the generosity of the people at the colleges on campus. Many faculty help support the non-funded programs and so they face similar challenges every day. Dean Palombo, of CFA, rightly said, "It's not who beats who on campus, but did the United Way benefit?" And, of course, it did.

"Afterimages III"

University
News Service

"Afterimages III," a performance by dance faculty and students, will be staged at 8 p.m., Friday and Saturday, Nov. 22 and 23 at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

Tickets for the concert in Jenkins Theatre, Fine Arts Center, are on sale on a first-come, first-served basis in the College of Fine Arts box office. The performance is part of this year's Studio Theatre season.

According to James Moore of the dance faculty, the program will be "mixed," including classical ballet, modern dance and musical theatre numbers. About 25 student dancers will perform.

Moore says many of the pieces are "works-in-progress," and are a "marriage" of drama and dance. The works will be critiqued by a panel of area judges, including Greg Chelcum, Irving Buchen, Marlene Turpin, Sherry Oliva and Joyce Palombo. They will select pieces to be entered in the American College Dance Festival competition.

Moore says this blending of drama and dance at UWSP makes the programs uncommon. UWSP is one of few universities in the country where the theatre and dance departments are combined. He contends that all of the great dancers are also great actors, and it is important for students to be proficient in both areas.

The concert will include "Doors," the first major work choreographed by John Millard, a senior dance major from Beloit. Millard will dance the solo role in this modern theatre piece which explores the many doors in our lives. He will be accompanied by a chorus of seven student performers. The piece is set to a tape collage of music by Sean Hughes of New Richmond.

Karen A. Studd, member of the dance faculty, has choreographed two works for the show, "Victorian Aftermath: A Gesture of Gender," and "Life Is Like..."

"Victorian Aftermath" is a modern dance with seven short sections. According to Ms. Studd, the piece explores the exploitation of human sexuality which has led to a loss of intimacy, tenderness and sensuality. "As consumers, we are con-

Although most students at UWSP know that our campus is nationally recognized for promoting Wellness, many people do not know about the student organization that does the most to promote this healthy lifestyle.

The Lifestyle Assistants are fourteen students who, under the direction of Carol Weston, promote Wellness through various programs. These programs include on-going classes in nutrition, fitness, stress management, aerobics, and weight control. The Lifestyle Assistants are also available to give presentations in the residence halls on these subjects.

One of the major projects of the Lifestyle Assistants is teaching the Health Issues classes at the Health Center. This one hour class is a requirement for any student who gets a physical at the Health Center.

The Lifestyle Assistants also do projects in conjunction with other health organizations. They hold Stop Smoking clinics through the American Cancer Society and are working on a Heart Healthy Dining program for the American Heart Association. p. 27

Class unfair

To The Editor:

Recently, we became aware of a policy currently in practice at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point, Health Center. For approximately two years, the Director of the Health Center, Bill Hettler, has required a mandatory "Health Issues class," mainly a contraceptive class, for any woman seeking medical services such as a pap and pelvic exam. The class is approximately one hour long, and is to be completed before the examination is given.

To date, two women have come forth with reports that they were denied medical services because they would not take the class, either because they were not available at the time the class was offered, or they chose not to attend.

Let us acknowledge a hypothetical situation. If a lesbian or non-sexually active woman calls to make an appointment because she is a responsible woman, concerned about her body and her health, she is required to attend this class. At this time, she may explain to the receptionist, a perfect stranger, that she is in fact a lesbian or not sexually active and is not in need of contraceptives, which many staff members at the Health Center seem to think is the only reason a woman wants a pap test. Speaking for ourselves, explaining to a stranger why contraceptives are not needed would be embarrassing and humiliating. We would probably seek medical attention elsewhere.

To date, there have been documented instances where at least two women, married and with children, have had to sit through this class. To quote one of the women, "It was embarrassing and humiliating." Our opinion is, if these women are responsible enough to marry and bring children into the world, they are responsible enough to become learned on the subject of contraception and their health.

As college students, let us suggest that forced education, no matter what the intent, is never a good policy, and often is ineffective.

Most importantly, we are students paying our share of segregated fees. Every year we pay $62 towards the Health Center's services. If we are paying for those services we should be able to elect or refuse to take the class without "begging" for special exemption from any nurse at the Health Center.

In the last couple of weeks, committee members on both Women's Affairs and Communications Committees have at random called the Health Center to either set up a fictitious appointment or to inquire about policy. We have received various and contradictory responses from the receptionist, such as: women need to take the class every time they received an exam, or were required to attend the class only the first time they made the appointment, and that the class was held only on Monday nights, and that the class was held three times a week. A new guideline for receptionists was supposedly set up in the beginning of the year. If this is true, why then are we still getting different responses to the same questions just because we call at different times of the day or on different days of the week?

This is not just a women's issue. In the past we have tried to get the women's mandatory contraception class changed on grounds of discrimination. The Health Center answered with a "male Health Issue class," mandatory for any male who wants a general physical. The current policy now in practice states that these women (and assumably men) "may attend the Health Issue class." Both of us are sure there is a world of difference between "may attend" and mandatory. If the classes are mandatory, why doesn't the policy say so? Furthermore, is it illegal to deny medical services to a student because he/she has not attended the class?

Finally, we believe a Health Issues class, teaching contraception methods and basic health concerns for young adults is a positive thing. It SHOULD be attended by both women and men seeking information voluntarily. Our point is this: women and men in college are responsible enough to become informed. The Health Center should offer this class in the Residence Halls and in the Center itself, but it should not be made mandatory. Any man or woman being denied medical services or having to delay an appointment because they cannot or will not attend the class should call the Women's Affairs Committee of Student Government at 346-3721.

Sincerely,
Sue Ellen Burns
N.A. Mayek

More Feminism

To The Editor:

Dear R. Lionel Krupnow, I'd like to sincerely thank you for single-handedly carrying the baton of the women's movement. Goodness knows we couldn't trust women in leadership positions of that sort. After all, (to continue the garden analogy), the seeds of the feminist movement certainly sprouted from the sensitivity and political know-how of many famous men. (Their names escape me at the moment—maybe you can fill me in on this point.) Certainly women knee deep in babies and baking pans must look to examples of patriarchal systems for direction in political change.

Political change, directed by men, has always happened overnight. Some sympathy is in order for those of us "napping" while attempting a social change on the monumental scale of the Civil Rights Movement. What a wonderful awakening feminists must be having when they read an article such as yours, and realize what men have been doing for women's issues all these years.

It's a shame the women who died in the suffrage movement can't be here to witness such dramatic progress as a man suing an airline company because there was no diaper changing table in the men's room. Not to mention some men, such as yourself, who deemed Geraldine Ferraro worthy of a masculine vote.

As for greater "militancy," obviously some male direction is in order. Many people, not as enlightened as yourself, believe that women who demand equal pay for equal work are militant.

Thank you again for pointing out the true path to "misdirected-on-again, off-again feminists." We didn't know that answering deliberately antagonistic essays in college newspapers were part of our feminist duties. We'll be sure to pay closer attention in the future.

The future of the feminist movement does, however, look fairly secure with men like you leading the fight. We can all equal opportunity for changing diapers exists in every airline in every corner of the world.

Your fellow feminists,
Crystal Gustafson

I want to express to the Pointer the gratitude of veterans, living and deceased, for the splendid editorial written in the "Viewpoints," section in the 11/7/85 issue of the Pointer.

Knowing your attitude strengthens my opinion of our young American population. You show maturity that puts you a cut above the traditional college student.

I delivered the Veterans Day address at the Lincoln Center, and I took the liberty of quoting passages from your fine article.

Thank you for remembering Veterans and what they contributed to maintaining the U.S.A. and freedom.

Grenada justified

To The Editor:

Last week a letter in The Pointer appeared discussing the Free Peoples Rally held by the College Republicans. The author criticized the College Republicans for holding the rally. I must disagree.

He stated that Grenada was not a rescue but instead was an invasion. The fact is, however, that a fourteen member Congressional fact finding committee led by Democrat Thomas Foley of Washington concluded that the American students on Grenada were a target for a Tehran-type hostage crisis. Upon studying their report, House Speaker Tip O'Neill reversed his earlier position and said the mission was justified under these circumstances. O'Neill, an ardent Reagan critic, then supports the argument that it was a rescue.

The author also makes the claim that armed conflict is not something to be glorified. Perhaps not, but the defense of freedom should be glorified. We have freedom in this country, but this is not the case in all countries. After the overthrow and murder of Maurice Bishop, there clearly was to be no freedom in Grenada. We had the opportunity to restore democracy and freedom at nominal risk. We gave the people of Grenada their freedom and for that we should be proud.

Just the facts

To The Editor:

We are very disappointed in the inaccurate reporting by your News Editor Joanne Davis in the article "Dorms without fire alarms" on November 14, 1985. We are writing to set the facts straight for Miss Davis, since both our director and our R.A. were called and the facts were still reported wrong. The fire that occurred in room 318 Hyer Hall on October 27 at 1 p.m., was started from a short in an electrical system of a stereo, not lit candles. Also it was the noise from the smoke alarm in the room that was plugged in and going off that helped us locate the correct room with the fire. Your greatest oversight was that you spent the entire article reporting about smoke alarms that were not hooked up. But the true problem that occurred from this fire was that the fire alarms weren't hooked up to the red pull boxes. Three of these boxes were pulled that day with no results. And students were evacuated by word of mouth rather than alarm.

Cordially,
The Gentlemen
of 3W Hyer

Editor's Note:

In regards to the cause of the fire in your RA's room, Don Burling, manager of Protective Services said, "The Chief of the Stevens Point Fire Department asked about the bookshelves; he then examined them. He determined the fire started because of a candle. That's what our report says."

Stevens Point Fire Chief Peter Ugorek said, "From all indications, two candles on the lower bookshelves were the initial 'heat' source. From the training we've had and seeing the way the shelves were scorched, it was clear the heaviest char was above the candles and not near the stereo equipment."

As to the Red Pull alarms you indicate were not working, Glenn Fink, University electrician said, "I pulled that station on three west the next day and it did, in fact, work. The stations must be pulled and released. The student who pulled them originally must have shoved it back. That shuts down the spring tension and therefore it won't work. Every station in Hyer Hall worked."

The inside source from Protective Services indicated the room alarm appeared to be unplugged. Correct, I did not personally see it; and, there is the possibility someone unplugged the alarm before the Fire Department and Protective Services reached the room —

although why I could not say.

Lastly, just to keep facts accurate, it's Mrs. Davis. — News Ed.

Send relief

To The Editor:

The Spanish Club is collecting donations for relief aid to send to Colombia because of the recent disaster there. Checks can be mailed to the University Center, Lower Level Box No. 65 made out to "American Red Cross," or also brought to the Foreign Language Laboratory in the Collins Classroom Center on the third floor. We will also accept cash donations.

We will be accepting donations until Saturday, Dec. 7, 1985 and we will then send them on to Colombia via the Red Cross.

Thank you for your support in this worthy cause at this time of Thanksgiving and Christmas spirit.

Thank You

Teachers sought

To The Editor:

The Foreign and Domestic Teachers Organization needs teacher applicants in all fields from Kindergarten through College to fill over six hundred teaching vacancies both at home and abroad.

Since 1968, our organization has been finding vacancies and locating teachers both in foreign countries and in all fifty states. We possess hundreds of current openings and have all the information as to scholarships, grants, and fellowships.

The principle problem with first year teachers is WHERE TO FIND THE JOBS!

Our information is free and comes at an opportune time when there are more teachers than teaching positions.

Should you wish additional information about our organization, you may write The National Teacher's Placement Agency, Universal Teachers, Box 5231, Portland, Oregon 97208.

We do not promise every graduate in the field of education a definite position. We do promise, however, to provide them with a wide range of hundreds of current vacancy notices both at home and abroad.

Sincerely,
John P. McAndrew,
President
Foreign and Domestic Teachers

Thanksgiving

Time for gluttony, football, and family relations

R. Lionel Krupnow
Features Editor

When I think of Thanksgiving I instantly think of food. Mounds of mashed potatoes steaming, with a slab of cool butter glistening next to them. Yams that smell of brown sugar. Jellos and beats, peas and carrots, squash, stuffing, and turkey filling every extra space on the table, which has been stretched with leaves. Too much for any one family to consume in one day, even if you count midnight snacks.

An odd custom, I've often thought. Celebrating our plenty by devouring it. But this is one holiday I'm not going to malign. In fact, Thanksgiving comes Thanksgiving has always been a time of sharing family intimacies, appreciating what I do have, and consuming all the calories and cholesterol my stomach can hold. It's the one holiday I don't have to worry about enjoying—I know I will.

It begins, for me, by helping prepare delectable dishes that taunt me the whole time they are being prepared. Mother is always busy slicing something; dad is trying to keep the turkey moist; brothers and sisters are bumping into each other, concentrating too much on their task to be irritated by the cramped quarters. Even in-laws are helping in every way possible.

Future generations of the

we can prepare the food faster," my sister Pat advises. Jennifer pouts her defeat and turns away, leaving the door open. No one bothers to close it. It feels too good.

Russell, my youngest brother, invariable reaches over and snatches a portion of what I'm preparing. I retaliate by sampling his preparation. We accuse each other of intemperance, deny, chastise, look for more food to sample.

When the food is finally ready, something happens to the women in our family, sisters-in-law included. Call my observation sexist, if you will, but I think it's genetic. They instinctively start serving out orders.

"Richard, take this and put it forget Tory," another adds.

"Richard, get those folding chairs from the basement."

"I will, when I finish with the last assignment, mom." I grin in her face. She slaps my arm, chuckles insipidly of herself, and fills my arms with another bowl of potatoes.

Ted has managed to find an unoccupied corner and grins as I rush by him. I pause and stick my head back into the kitchen. "Ted needs something to do," I snitchingly announce.

"I thought I sent him for a tablecloth. Ted!"

"Little sh—" He slides into the kitchen.

One thing that is never around the Krupnow dining table is silence. Mingled with the aroma months, stories about the family members who live out of state, and just general talk about people who have incurred our wrath, or just made us laugh.

And though dad always complains about the phone bill when it arrives, we end up calling Mike, in North Carolina, and Bill, in Arkansas.

It is this ingestion of conversation that I enjoy most about Thanksgiving. It's like a festive version of Meet the Press. I always end up seeing some family member in a light that I had not seen him or her in before.

No subject is barred from our conversations. Ted and I goat my sister, Ruby, for being a militant feminist. In turn she pokes us for being too inferior to see closer to capturing the spirit of Christmas than I have ever known Christmas to. You don't approach the day expecting to receive presents and then finding out you didn't get what you wanted anyway.

Krupnow family are trying to squeeze back into the house but are dutifully directed back outside.

"But I'm hungry," Jennifer whines.
"Then get out of the way so on the table." My mother shoves a dish of food in my face. "Dave get the kids," Pat orders.

"Rustle Isaac in, too," Annie calls back, carrying a bowl of cauliflower to the table. "Don't of turkey and yams, amid the clinking of forks and clinking of glasses, there are economic solutions, political theories, and religious conjecture. There is news about what the family has been doing for the last six

"Ball up! Listen Don—" "We've got to settle this now!" Georgie Schultz cut in. "The summit's over and the Chief wants to send a message to the Rusksies. Just so they know we can still play hardball."

I'd heard the rumors. The

"Okay, okay," Donnie said. "I still say we nail the Philippines. That Marcos guy is getting to be a real liability."

"Jesus Christ," Georgie said. "We already decide not to invade the Philippines. Would you listen up Eddie."

I could see Don was mad but he managed to keep quiet.

"Look," Cappy said. "I say what the logistics are on an in-

"Alright, let's concentrate on someone close," Georgie said.

"Ideas?" "How about Mexico?" Donnie asked in a small voice.

"Correct me if I'm wrong," Billie said, "but New Mexico is ward conspiratorially, "mexico Georgie almost went over the edge on that one.

"Mexico! Goddamn Mexico! Not New Mexico!"

"Better calm down there, Georgie," he said. I've got a double-O-rating."

At every book store in Anytown, America there is at least one magazine with headlines that read, "The Single Liberated Working Woman Of The 1980's Is Happy: Here's Why." Across the aisle there will probably be three different magazines with headlines to this effect, "Pamper Your Squeeze: Make Every Day a Valentine's Day For Him."

Even though the single working woman gets a nod of approval in 1985, haunting echoes of the past still interfere with a women's ability to make proper decisions concerning her future. The ditsy secretary and the helpless homemaker stereotype did not die when the Women's Lib Movement gained popularity so many years ago. Even today there are silly rumors that the passage of ERA will annihilate the American family. Follow-up theories attempt to persuade the working woman to trash her career, get married and have babies before that final tick of her biological clock.

Campus eateries reviewed

The Corner Market

by Christopher T. Dorsey
Pointer Editor

Ever get the munchies when running through the U.C.? I recently did, what perfect timing — I had a food review of the Corner Market to do.

Some people have the idea that the Corner Market is so named because of its location on the corner of a block of U.C. eateries. Well, the truth is, it got its name from having the proverbial corner on the market — not its location.

As I stood in front of the refrigerator section of the Market, I couldn't help but overhear a couple of women commenting on the price of eggs — boiled that is. If you think 25 cents is too much to pay for a boiled egg, you'd have company. That isn't all. How does 70 cents for a single strip of beef jerky sound? You are what you eat if you pay that price.

As I filtered through the ½-pint cartons of milk while checking expiration dates, an off-duty University Food Service manager shuffled through and noticed I was taking notes — I guess taking notes about milk is odd. "Too expensive," she said. "I think the Food Service pays 11 cents a carton for that milk." That's not a big deal until you understand that they charge 45 cents for the same carton. With milk prices like that, who needs price supports?

Like bagels? I hope you're ready to pay — 99 cents for one. In case you're wondering, you can buy the same bagels, six for 85 cents at Hal's Red Owl. Does 60 cents for a can of soda sound too expensive? Probably yes, considering you can buy the same soda for 50 cents a can at any of the pop machines on campus or pay 40 cents a can at Hal's. Need your vitamins and minerals? It'll cost you. One banana runs a mere 35 cents — not bad unless you realize the same banana costs about 10 cents in a grocery store.

To round out a square meal, how about a leftover cheeseburger from the Park Place? Don't look for a discount just because the burger is three hours old and has been handled by countless shoppers. After Park Place closes, the sandwiches that aren't sold don't go to waste — they simply get placed in the refrigerated section of the Market. When I asked the polite cashier at the Market why there isn't a discount on leftover Park Place burgers on their second shelf life, she responded, "Students are always asking for those type of sandwiches." Seems fair enough. One problem though — all students living in residence halls must be on either a meal plan or on points. There are only so many places to spend those points, and Food Service knows it.

The report from the Market isn't all bad, though. Students can take stock in the fact that the Market keeps long hours for those late study nights. You won't find friendlier cashiers either. Besides an occasional salad needing to be tossed and a shriveled orange begging to be rotated, the quality of Corner Market's produce remains quite good, considering the volume of students through its doors.

There's no asking "where's the beef?" when dipping a ladle into the Market's famous winter warming chili. Add a cold ham and cheese on whole wheat, an orange, and for dessert I recommend the apple pie. If you're in a hurry, however, grab a granola S'more and get some fiber.

Wooden Spoon

by Linda Fortier
Staff Reporter

I was starved at noon on Monday. So starved, in fact, that I knew only a delicious, full-course meal at the Wooden Spoon could satisfy me.

The Wooden Spoon is located at the far back end of the chain of restaurants in the University Center. I was pleasantly greeted at the entrance by a large, ornately carved wooden sign that read: Welcome. And so, I pulled a strange triangular tray from a stack of many, looked up at the sign, and smiled a second time. I thought the title, "The Wooden Spoon," connotated an air of homemade everything. "Yes," I smiled, "let's just see how wooden the spoon is."

After taking silver and a tall glass, I found the next stop was the assortment of beverage machines. Of all the soda, tea, coffee, or water I could have chosen, I filled my glass with cold frothy skim milk instead. First food group down. Three to go.

The next pit-stop astonished me. Dessert! Already? But I couldn't help exclaiming "Oh Boy!" So I splurged. Fluffy, rich-looking coconut cream pie. I picked up the plate and lovingly set it on my tray. But then I thought, as I kept eyeing that pie on my tray, that the presence of such a heavenly confection could very well bias my feelings about my former four-course promise. So I took it out of my mind (but I left it on my tray). Next I came to the main section of entrees.

Oh, and how delicious they all looked. I could get baked ham and vegies, or beef stroganoff and vegies, or tuna and cheese on french bread and a bowl of beef barley soup. I stood there, staring at all that marvelous food, and I realized that I hadn't the faintest idea what I wanted. I glanced from the chalked menu to the food and back again. Oh, how could life be so cruel.

The beef stroganoff and vegies were of the middle price range — two something — so I chose that. The cook who presided there (at least she looked like she did) heaped my plate full with food. My hungry bulging eyes saw chunky stroganoff slathered with thick gravy, a vegie combination of broccoli, cauliflower, and carrots, and a white dinner roll. Hmmmm. It all smelled heavenly. And the three remaining food groups had been tackled.

I turned around, fully believing that my adventure was done and I could find a table to sit at and EAT. But I ran into a salad bar instead.

And oh, what a big one! This salad bar could almost out-do the Ponderosa salad bar! It had lettuce, every imaginable salad fixing, macaroni salads, fruits and jellios. That strawberry jello crammed with banana slices and strawberry bits certainly looked nummy. I scooped a large chunk up, and plopped it, quivering, (both me and the jello), into a bowl.

Fremont Terrace

by Crystal Gustafson
Staff reporter

The Fremont Terrace is located on the east end of the University Center. It's decor is much nicer than the Wooden Spoon's, or Jeremiah's; it has large windows that look out over Saint Michael's parking lot. The menu is limited, and one would assume that it would provide better quality food.

The day we visited, (I brought a friend with me), Fremont Terrace was offering a special that consisted of a salmon patty on a slice of sourdough bread, with cooked cabbage on the side. The restaurant is small; and it was evident they were serving cooked cabbage even before we arrived.

The first thing we received was a glass of ice water with a lemon slice floating on top. After we ordered, a complimentary warm bran muffin arrived on a plate with butter rosettes.

We decided to split an appetizer—mushroom caps stuffed with sausage and topped with grated cheese. To be perfectly honest, the appetizer smelled a little suspicious. My friend and I each ate one, and both of us were unimpressed.

After a long wait, my friend's turkey sandwich arrived, along with my taco salad.

My friend had few complaints, except that her sandwich had been microwaved, and the bread was soggy. The sandwich was served with lettuce, sliced tomatoes, potato chips and a pickle.

My taco salad came in a crispy deep fried shell. The salad had little meat, cheese, or taco sauce. The grated lettuce really overwhelmed the salad, which was disappointing because taco salad is one of my favorite lunches.

My friend opted out on dessert, but I chose an Oliver Twist-Kforget to ask why it was named that; I hadn't noticed anything else on the menu with a literary title. Maybe Dickens liked his ice cream served with a little Kaluha. The dessert, ice cream topped with kaluha, whipped cream and a cherry was fairly unremarkable. It was, however, my favorite part of the meal.

All in all, I think Fremont Terrace is probably one of the better places to eat on campus. There were a lot of non-student types eating there, notable by three piece suits, and no backpacks.

It is a quiet place to eat and the atmosphere, boosted by lots of green plants, is relaxing. The service was good; the waitress didn't intrude on our conversation, yet our water glasses were always full. Do not attempt Fremont Terrace between classes. I did and I was late getting to class.

If you're looking for someplace quiet and fairly nice on campus, Fremont Terrace would probably be it. If you're looking for great food, it probably wouldn't be.

The Subway

R. Lionel Krupnow
Features Editor

I enjoy submarine sandwiches, so when our illustrious chief, Chris Dorsey, suggested I run reviews of all the eateries on campus, I happily volunteered to visit The Subway.

The Subway has a decor that reminds me of an intimate, out-of-the-way cafe: the lighting is low, decorations simple, but inviting. But The Subway falls short of its own potential. It operates like a fast food restaurant—which is fine if you're looking for something to stuff your face with while running to classes.

The problem with the reasoning is that The Subway is located in Allen Center, well off the beaten path between classes.

If you haven't visited The Subway before, the procedure for ordering is a little different than you might be used to. Next to the windows that look into the kitchen is a table with order forms and pencils. That's right, you fill out a form, hand it to the person on the other side of the counter, and wait for your order to come up.

The Subway's menu offers such items as: hamburgers, bagels, nachos, fries, and of course, submarine sandwiches.

Subs come on either wheat or white bread with your choice of seven meats, four cheeses, mushrooms, and onions. Each sub comes with lettuce, tomatoes, and a special sauce. With Thanksgiving break on my mind I ordered a turkey sub.

Unfortunately, The Subway only offers Point or Miller Lite to beer fans. Now, I'm well aware of the taste tests that Point Brewery claims were done rating them third in the world and first in America when it comes to taste. But I have never placed much confidence in the judgment of men who drink for a living. I only do it as a hobby and I know that by midnight, on Friday night, any beer tastes great. Imagine how impaired your judgement can be when you are doing that all the time.

Wellness fans will be pleased to hear that there isn't any smoking allowed in The Subway. Smokers may find that a little irritating.

My name was called, quicker than I expected. I went to the window, got my sub and onion rings, and returned to my table. The onion rings and sub were good.

Note, I didn't say great. I did not experience a culinary orgasm.

Again, I have to question what food service niche The Subway is trying to fill. It is too far away from the mainstream of student traffic to be focusing on fast food service. It should be offering atmosphere and supplying students with a cozy place they can relax when they don't want the bustle of the UC but can't go off campus for that little extra special cafe.

If I had had a little more atmosphere and a little slower service, my rating of The Subway would be higher. The Subs are okay, and I can live with Point beer. But for the cost of my shoe leather, if I'm going to hob the extra distance for a sub, Togo's is closer and the subs are better.

Park Place

Marianne Ritzer
Staff Reporter

What's the most important meal of the day? Breakfast, of course! With that in mind, I decided to eat at The Park Place, University Center. I wanted to taste what they had to offer for the meal that has achieved such status in our society.

Before I ordered, I sat at one of the tables nearby and studied Park Place and its surroundings. It is my belief that an eating establishment can only be judged on what it promises to do. What does it promise? Well, it's a fast food dining area. That means I will get my food very soon after I order it.

Piccadeli

by Carol Diser
Staff reporter

While it might seem unfair to compare a university food service restaurant to a commercial restaurant, it seems to me that

As I looked around, that's what seemed to be happening. People were carrying brown trays to tables in smoking or non-smoking areas. When they were settled at their tables, they ate, studied and talked. I decided to give it a try.

I walked to the counter and read the posted breakfast menu. There were seven entries to choose from ranging in price from $1.09 to $1.60. Each entree included eggs except the Hot Cakes and Sausage.

The ad in "the Daily" suggested the Bacon-Egg-Cheese Croissant ($1.30). I ordered that and orange juice (45¢). There were no other juices to choose from. The woman who took my order was very friendly, courteous and efficient. She seemed to enjoy serving and working with students and staff.

Within a few minutes, I was handed my croissant and juice with a smile and a "Have a good day." I like that personal touch. It didn't sound pre-recorded.

My breakfast was quite good for fast food. The croissant was small, but light and tasty, and the bacon was crisp. The melted cheese and the egg tasted like cheese and eggs should taste. (Salt lovers might want to reach for the white shaker.)

For $1.75 (plus tax) I was treated to the most important meal of the day at Park Place. It was a nice change from my usual breakfast of cereal, 1% milk and a banana.

a campus-run restaurant should be able to at least equal if not exceed the quality and value of meals available in restaurants in the community. Piccadeli, unfortunately, falls far short of this expectation.

Last Friday I sampled the available menu at Piccadeli and was disappointed at the narrow selection of choices. Piccadeli serves sandwiches, soup, coleslaw, potato salad, potato chips, beverages, and ice cream. The big variety at Piccadeli is in the option to "create your own sandwich." This means that you can choose what kinds of meat and cheese you want on your sandwich and allows you to choose such add-ons as butter, mayo, catsup, etc.

Actually, this is pretty much the same thing I do when I make a sandwich at home. The price, however, is not at all the same. A sandwich that consists

The Park Place opens at 7:15 a.m. and breakfast is served until 10:30 a.m. Lunch is served from 11:00 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. I didn't eat lunch there but according to their menu, they serve burgers and fries, onion rings, hot dogs, chicken nuggets and fish ranging in price from $1.09 to $1.95. Chocolate shakes are 90 cents. (I understand that the fries are a little soft at times, but still tasty.)

So, the next time your stomach shouts for nourishment, you might want to try Park Place. I recommend it for quick, tasty food and a VERY friendly atmosphere.

of one bread item (you get to choose what type of bread you want) with three choices of meat or cheese will cost you $2.20. And I hasten to stress that one meat or cheese choice consists of one very stinky slice.

Amigos

Renee Radlinger
Staff reporter

I recently had my weekly craving for Mexican food (other-wise it is Chinese) and decided I'd let someone else do the cooking. In my search for something other than cafeteria food I thought a nice alternative might be Amigos.

To my surprise, cafeteria food is what I found. Amigos is arranged in the all too familiar cafeteria style—presumably dictated by University Foods. However, the colorfully lit board boasted a variety of Mexican and American cuisine. Mexican is what I was after and Mexican is what I got. I had a choice of a taco, taco salad, burrito, chimichanga or nachos. And for those not interested in beef and refried beans Amigos offered sloppy joes, pizza puffs, or burgers. I chose the South of the Border Platter. As an accompaniment, I decided on soda rather than a beer or margarita. This would allow my taste buds to concentrate on the Mexican cuisine. However, the platter was not much of a platter. The cook tried to cram everything onto a much too small styrofoam plate. The results; the soft-shelled taco was smothered in the sour cream intended for the burrito which, in turn, was sogged by the cheese intended for the nachos. Fortunately the refried beans, which could have used a little flavoring, were served separately. Once I was able to distinguish what was what, the South of the Border Platter was

by Brian McCombie
Staff reporter

Jeremiah's Restaurant has many things to recommend it by. The atmosphere is pleasant. The service is good. The drinks are cold. And the pizza —

Well, the pizza a friend and I shared had little to recommend it. I specifically ordered pizza because Stevens Point has quite a competitive pizza market, and I wanted to see how Jeremiah's pizza would stack up to the competition. The competition is safe.

My friend and I ordered a 12" Flathead pizza, with a whole-wheat crust, topped off with cheese, sausage, mushrooms and onions. Neither my friend or I felt that there was enough cheese, sausage, or mushrooms on our pizza. We also agreed that the crust was only slightly stiffer than a freshly-baked cookie. For the $7.80 the pizza cost, we would've been better off buying a Tombstone. (My friend did, however, like the onions.)

I think that if most people were served the pizza that my friend and I were, they would not come back to Jeremiah's. I wouldn't return to Jeremiah's myself, except that I've been there before and did find the food very good. Friends of mine and I have eaten Jeremiah's nachos, deep-fried mushrooms,

Need to write is a fact of the business world

You suffered through English 101. The end of the semester is in sight. In fact, you may feel so good about it that you'd like to start celebrating early—if it weren't for the fact that you have to take English 102 next semester. Oh, well. You can always hope that you get a different professor next time.

Maybe you're one of the lucky ones. Almost finished with English 102. No more research papers. Ooops. Still have to take two writing emphasis courses: one inside your major and one outside.

What is it with all this writing, anyway? Who cares about participles, subjunctives, and similes—besides your nutty English professor? Your mother doesn't care if you write sentence fragments. She just wants you to write.

What employer is going to care about the essay you wrote comparing and contrasting the mating habits of the earth worm with those of Indian Elephants? Your date certainly wasn't impressed.

If you wanted to be a writer you would have majored in English and purchased a volume of Shakespeare's plays.

I hate to disappoint you but regardless of your major, chances are you are going to be a writer.

Richard M. Davis recently surveyed 348 prominent men listed in Engineers of Distinction and found that they spent 24% of their time writing. Further, when he asked the respondents to evaluate the importance of writing in industry he received responses like the following:

"In my long experience and association with scientists and engineers, I can't remember a single instance of anyone advancing to a position of significance who could not express himself effectively on paper." — Edward R. Zebrowski, Manager, Rohm and Haas Company.

"The most intelligent engineer is of no value to his fellow man unless he can communicate with others, both orally and in writing." — Richard C. LeVere, Johns-Manville.

"Scientists and engineers who do not have the ability to write effectively will be greatly handicapped in the furtherance of their careers, no matter how brilliant or competent they may otherwise be." — Wesley P.

Gross, Chairman of the Board, Magma Copper Company.

The great advancements that have been made in science and technology haven't replaced the need to communicate through writing. Indeed, it seems that the need to write has increased in recent years.

Davis not only notes the importance of writing in industry but also the large volume of writing that occurs in government. The United States government is the largest publisher in the world.

Professor James Stokes of UWSP says that "the world runs on proposals." Nowhere is this more evident than in government.

Davis cites many examples: "The request for a proposal on the F-15 (fighter aircraft), for instance, contained 10,000 pages.

"The average length of government proposals was estimated to be 40,000 pages.

Further, NAVAIR (Naval Air Systems Command), just one command system of the navy, has an inventory of over 25,000 manuals, for 135 aircraft models, consisting of approximately 3 million pages.

Any student who wants to get a further idea of the number of publications put out by the U.S. government can visit the Documents Depository on the sixth floor of the LRC.

The point is that you don't have to be a novelist or a poet to justify learning to write. Since recorded time writing has been essential to the functions of society.

Writing well means more than quite tasty. For a mere $4.50 I was full.

Amigos tries and does succeed in helping spice up the meals with a variety of condiments—a help yourself set up. If the microwave just happens to be out of order, that cold burrito can always be warmed up with enchilada sauce, laco sauce, hot or mild salsa sauce or for an extra burst of fire, green or yellow chili peppers.

Amigos tries to capture a festive Mexican atmosphere. Moving away from the cafeteria line one is warmly welcomed by an atmosphere of softness. Candles soften the colorful Mexican rugs draping from the walls and the delicate pinata and crepe paper streaming from the ceiling. However, the harsh tiled floor and scattering of tables fail to carry the soft tone home. The lack of partitions only contributes to the cafeteria look. Yet Amigos does offer something special for your dining pleasure—MTV.

Amigos succeeds in providing courteous service. The cashier was very efficient in describing the various dishes. I was slightly disappointed by the lack of choice in platters. Keep in mind though, that Amigos does cover the basics of Mexican food. In addition, the wonderful treat of deep-fried ice cream is well worth the trip. So next time I have a craving for Mexican food I'll try Amigos again.

And I thought it really was a wonderful meal. I licked my fork clean over and over again. I kept noticing old friends and groups of favorite faculty. I had to admit that this place probably used more than one wooden spoon.

formation says we should be able to take their army."

"John?"
I had been sitting there, trying not to say anything. Never get your hands dirty unless you have to, I always say.

"George, Mexico is close, but I don't know. Cappy?"

"My feelings exactly, John. I was thinking more along the lines of Nicaragua. Those Sandinistas have been giving the Chief a real pain for I don't know how long."

George leaned back in his chair and put on his thoughtful look.

"Nicaragua. Yeah, I like it," he said. "John?"

"Well, George, Nicaragua is close, but I don't know. Donnie?"

"You're right about that John. It is close. What's the word, Billie, can we take 'em?"

"Their troops have had recent combat experience, but I think we can take them. Provided we have the element of surprise and, oh say, seven-to-one numerical superiority."

"No problem," Cappy said. "If it's one thing we've got, it's troops."

"Are we agreed on Nicaragua then?" George asked. We all nodded. "Good. The Chief will be happy. The only problem is what to tell the press once our boys start landing."

"You think we really should tell them anything?"

"It's not that I want to Donnie, but the chances are they'll find out. We don't want to embarrass the Chief."

"I've got an idea," Cappy said. "These guys are socialists right? I mean, they're only one step from Commies right? Since when isn't that enough of a reason?"

"I won't deny there isn't a lot of precedent in that area, but I think the Chief will want a little more ammo. John?"

"Nicaragua is socialist George," I replied. "But I don't know. Donnie?"

"Kick this around. How about saying the Nicaraguans are building an airstrip for Cuban planes to refuel enroute to the South Seas. Carrying arms to Tahitian terrorists. You know the line."

"Might work, might work," George mused. "But it needs a little more substance."

"Try this George," Billie Casey volunteered. "Get those airstrip pictures my boys took in Grenada. Touch 'em up a little and get the Chief to do another news conference to expain what a threat it is."

"The public won't like it," Cappy said. "It's been done."

"That's why it'll work," Billie snapped back. "Hell, the public took 200-plus dead Marines without batting an eye, you really think they'll mind this?"

"Billie's right," Donnie said. "The public loves reruns. Look at the summer TV schedules. John?"

"You're right Donnie, the public does like reruns, but I don't know. George?"

"I think Billie and Donnie are right, John. What do you say, Cappy."

"Well," he said grudgingly. "It does seem like the public will take almost anything." He smiled. "Let's go for it."

"Okay," George said as he wrote on a legal pad. "Let me make some notes here for the Chief. Grenada—I mean Nicaragua, airstrip, the press, troops and reruns. Anything we should add John?"

me of being a communist. My mother intervenes.

"Brothers shouldn't argue like that. It isn't Christian." She passes Ted more potatoes.

"We had another baptism this week," Pat informs. I don't recognize the name she mentions. I stopped going to church years ago. I learn that Davy, my nephew, has accepted the priesthood.

"Well, I think we should all be concerned about the world's view of religion." Dave grabs a slab of turkey. "You're concerned about the possibility of total destruction? The way to solve the problem is through God."

"God can't solve problems if he doesn't exist." I scoot more cranberries onto my plate.

"You talk smart." My mother nods. "Just wait until you're ready to die. You'll be calling to God then."

"I don't believe in God." "Please, Richard, the children."

"Afraid they might learn the truth?"

"Well, we need something to believe in, in this world." Dad suggests through a mouthful of beefs. I've always admired his middle-of-the-road solutions to catastrophic problems.

Russell usually surrenders himself from the debate and clicks on the T.V. It has become a tradition to watch the Detroit Lions game on Thanksgiving Day—my father is from Detroit. It depends on who is playing, and who takes what side. I usually side with Detroit, unless they are playing Minnesota, and always if they are playing Green Bay. I have to side against Ted on some point. Still, even with the game on, we are talking more than we are watching. The subject matter has simply changed.

Now Ted is arguing that Bart Starr was the best quarterback to ever live. I'm convinced that the best quarterback was Fran Tarkenton. We remember some of the best plays we have ever seen on the gridiron. And, true to his form, my dad always offers his nostalgic look at the sport when players were men and didn't need all that padding to play the game they loved.

It doesn't really matter who wins, who's eaten the most, what side of the debate a member of the family took. It's a sharing that happens in our family, a time we can justify pulling ourselves away from other activities and rediscover ourselves as a family unit. We argue, disagree, congratulate and tease, but we have fun asserting our individuality among people who are interested in who we are.

I don't know what you'll be going the Wednesday before Thanksgiving, but I'll be using the free time to gather a few crib notes for halftime.

Deer season: A time to try men's souls

by Alan Lemke
Senior Editor

Every year thousands of hunters take to the woods to enjoy the annual Wisconsin gun-deer season. However, for every person who enjoys the season, there are many more who find deer season nothing more than a continual string of bad luck and hunting misfortune. Take it from someone who knows, deer season can be a nightmare.

It usually starts about 4:30 a.m. opening morning. It is at this time when someone utters some idiotic statement to the effect of "daylight in the swamp." (Now, I've been around a lot of swamps in late November, and have yet to see one where daylight breaks much before 6:15.) Nonetheless, you drag yourself out of the sack and try to fire up for the day's hunt ahead of you.

As you begin to dress, a sick feeling hits your stomach when you realize you forgot to pack your insulated underwear. To make matters worse, someone from downstairs calls out that it is only eight degrees outside. Well, there's not much you can do now, so you throw on what clothes you have and head downstairs.

Down here, things don't show any sign of getting better. While you were searching for your underwear, your hunting buddies managed to polish off the entire plate of pancakes, and all that's left for you is two pieces of toast and a sausage link. You start in on the toast, but as you grab the sausage link, it slips from your hand and falls into one of your hunting boots. Oh, well, there's a lot to be said for toast.

You finally make it from the shack and are enroute, via pickup truck, to your hunting destination. Halfway there, you realize that your rifle is still back at the shack. So, after you retrieve your rifle, you finally make it to your hunting area at around 6:15.

Now, you begin to rush yourself so you'll make it to your stand before it gets light. As you sprint through the woods, you realize that unlike Jesus, you are not able to walk on water. The result is two wet feet, thanks to the open water in the swamp that the limited daylight has failed to show you (maybe daylight in the swamp is closer to 6:30).

Ah, but you finally reach the spot you're waiting for. The stand wouldn't pass for a Frank Lloyd Wright original, but it will serve your purpose. The location you chose is also excellent, right where a small creek empties into the river. The surrounding area is all swampland, and you know the big bucks like to hang out down there.

Once perched in your stand, the vigil begins. Slowly, you notice that you are starting to lose the feeling in your feet. You try to wiggle your toes to create some friction for warmth, but this is impossible due to the fact that your toes are all frozen together. This might cause some hunters to pack it in, but not you. You haven't suffered this much just to quit now. So, the waiting continues.

In a short while, the sun is making its way into the morning sky. It isn't actually warming you up, but the psychological association between the sun and heat give you some comfort. Also, the woods around you begin to come to life. Birds chirping, squirrels scampering around and one obnoxious woodpecker you swear you'd kill if only you could see it.

Then, you hear brush breaking behind your right shoulder. You slowly turn your head to zero in on the exact spot. As you do, you see the biggest buck of your life step from the underbrush. Ten, maybe twelve points. You can't really be sure, all you can see is antlers. But now, you are faced with another interesting problem. In order to shoot at this monster you will either have to shoot left-handed or try to turn around on your stand.

The base of your stand is so small you hardly have room to change your mind, much less your position. So, you have to try the left-handed shot, something you didn't practice while sighting in your rifle. You bring the gun slowly to your shoulder and get this trophy in your sights. Just as you fire, a gust of wind begins to sway the tree you're in like a flagpole. You have failed to touch even a hair on the deer's body, but as you walk over to the area he was standing in, you notice one dead woodpecker.

Thoroughly disgusted, you trudge back through the woods and swamp, not caring how much noise you make or how wet you get. You've cursed everything from the weather to your gun to the deer itself. As you emerge from the woods with your head down, you look up only to see the same buck feeding on the grass in front of your pickup truck.

In haste, you fire three quick shots. Once again, the deer bounces off into the woods, but you managed to drop your truck in its tracks. At this point, you seriously wonder if things can get any worse.

But, cheer up, there are only eight more days left. They can't all be as bad as today was...or can they?

A dangerous preservation

The enforcement of our hunting and fishing laws belongs to those individuals who patrol the headwaters and backlots of this state—wardens. The job of a conservation officer is often difficult, seldom noticed, and at times very dangerous. The following is a list of those Wisconsin wardens who were injured or killed protecting Wisconsin natural resources. —Out. ed.

Injured

1920s. H.W. MacKenzie, Crandon—Hit in the head with axe as he accosted men fishing trout out of season. MacKenzie survived to become director of the Wisconsin Conservation Department.

1920s. E.M. "Pop" Weaver, Woodruff—Beaten and left atop a beaver dam for dead.

1931. W.A. Cole—Shot in both arms and left leg while trying to make arrest for killing deer illegally.

1933. Stuart Hayner, Eagle River—Hit on the head and beaten, left near the Wisconsin River with a fractured skull and severe injuries after accosting beaver trappers trapping out of season.

1940s. "Doc" Chase, Oshkosh—Tied up to be thrown into the Fox River by illegal fisherman at Omro but saved.

1940s. Don Ewers, Green Bay—Nearly thrown into Lake Michigan after boarding a commercial fishing vessel from Two Rivers that carried illegal fish.

1948. Kenneth Beghin, Park Falls—Hospitalized with serious injuries after being beaten by deer shiners. He is now chief pilot for the DNR.

1949. Warren Holger, Mercer—Hit with a flashlight in an attempt to stop deer shiners as he clung to a car going 50-60 miles per hour.

1960s. Keith Reinchenbach, Chilton—Beaten by deer shiners.

1960s. Jim Whalen, Eau Claire—Severely injured when his car was hit by a truck while he was investigating a deer shining case.

1968. James Chizek, Park Falls—Severely injured when struck by a truck while investigating a deer shining incident.

1975. Bill Mitchell, West Bend—Beaten by five snowmobilers when attempting to arrest one of the group for failing to have current license registration.

1977. Chuck Petrie, Green Bay—Unhurt when a commercial fisherman tried to stab him then threw a knife while Petrie served a search warrant at a Jacksonport bar.

1978. Dick Ahney, Crandon—Suffered a broken leg when hit by a car while attempting to halt a vehicle used in deer shining.

1978. Mike Dresen, Beaver Dam—Run over by a car along with a deputy sheriff while attempting to stop the vehicle during a deer shining incident.

1978. Winter Hess, Marinette—Suffered a broken cheekbone when struck from behind after stopping a pickup truck carrying a load of illegal lake trout.

Dead

1923. J.B. Carter—Died from injuries received in an auto accident in Barron county.

1924. Michael Kleist—Killed in an automobile crash while chasing violators. Headquarters at Fond du Lac.

1928. A.P. Vanderkelen—Drowned when boat capsized in Little Sturgeon Bay while checking duck hunters.

1929. Einar Johnson—Shot and killed by violator while attempting to make arrest for illegal beaver trapping in Rusk county. His assailant was wounded in the shootout, but recovered and was later tried and convicted.

1930. W.H. Riebe—Killed by train while on a fur transaction assignment. Headquarters at Eagle River.

1933. Edgar L. Alderman—Killed in a car wreck. Headquarters at Portage.

1934. Albert Lee—Killed in an automobile accident. Headquarters at Luck.

1936. Robert Keeney—Stricken with appendicitis while on a beaver complaint in Forest county. Was unable to reach a doctor in time. He died from gangrene poisoning.

In 1938 in Jackson county a warden's pregnant wife, Mrs. Joe Jonas, was shot from

Hunters carry many responsibilities with hunt

by Christopher T. Dorsey
Pointer Editor

"Posted," "No trespassing," "Keep Out" and a host of similar signs are framing many woods and fields of Wisconsin. The timing isn't coincidence. The annual gun-deer hunting season is only two days away and for some landowners it's one big headache. For some property owners, posting their property is merely an attempt to insure quality deer hunting for themselves. For other landowners, however, the fear of potential crop and property damage caused by some hunters is enough to limit hunter access. For still other landowners, past encounters with hunters who cared more about bragging rights to a trophy buck than whether or not they obeyed the law has meant eliminating hunter access altogether.

At no other time during the year is the hunting fraternity, and sorority, so carefully scrutinized by the general public than during the gun-deer season. An army of over 600,000 orange clad deer hunters will invade small, northern communities of Wisconsin bringing with them life-giving tourism dollars. For some hunters, however, that isn't enough. A few hunters will find it necessary to bring with them an attitude of disrespect—both for the wildlife resource and the landowners who grant them access to their property.

At a time when anti-hunting organizations are increasing their legislative efforts and the general public is calling for tighter regulation of wildlife resources, hunters cannot afford to let a few "slob" hunters spoil the sport of hunting for the majority of hunters who do obey game laws.

I find myself, being an avid hunter, having to defend my reasons for hunting to increasing number of anti-hunters. "Too often," said one anti-hunter, "hunters won't even bother to ask permission before they hunt on my property." Trespassing remains as the single greatest blemish to the hunters' already tarnished image.

I became angered as one landowner explained to me why he wouldn't let me hunt on his property. "I used to allow hunters on my land until I started deer hunting—seives and gates left open." The thoughtless actions of a few hunters had cost me an opportunity to hunt.

Hunters must realize that the public often perceives the destructive actions of a few hunters to be representative of all hunters. We as hunters are constantly being judged by members of society who are either formulating opinions about hunting or who are already opposed to hunting and seek to exploit the mistakes of careless hunt-

by Kent Walstrom
Sports Editor

When my editor approached me and suggested that I submit an article about deer hunting, I considered many angles to the sport which I felt would be interesting to the reader. What I settled on, however, is perhaps the most redundant but far and above the most important aspect of deer hunting—safety.

I credit my father with instilling in me the respect for firearms, along with a close friend, who died in a hunting accident when he was sixteen years old.

At the time of his death, he carried the same model gun I did, a 30-30 Winchester lever-action. Needless to say, I sold the gun after the end of that deer season, but the lessons of my father and the painful memories of my friend have given me an uncompromising respect—perhaps even fear—for firearms that will never diminish.

that I offer some common sense tips well worth remembering during the hunting season. While such reminders may seem trivial, it is wise to remember that the loss of a human life is an awful price to pay for mistakes that can so easily be made when a firearm is involved.

First of all, it is important that a hunter sights his or her rifle in before the season starts. Scopes in particular have a habit of adjusting by themselves, even if your firearm stays in the gun cabinet between seasons. Along with getting the feel of your gun while practicing your aim, it gives you an excuse to thoroughly clean your firearm before you use it during the season.

While it is not necessary to remain aware of both the direction you're heading and the return direction you must take to leave the woods. And common sense alone, if not simple respect, should tell you not to trespass on private property without the landowners' permission. Along the same lines, never leave camp, even for a handful of firewood, without wearing at least a share of hunter's orange.

As for your gun itself, its chief purpose spells danger. When a hunter downs a deer, he or she will often eject the empty shell and jack another into the chamber in case a second "kill shot" is needed. This is perfectly fine, but in their excitement hunters often forget to return the hammer to the safety position. If the second shot is not necessary, a hunter is liable to tote the loaded gun all the way back to camp (after they've dressed their deer out) before they realize that the gun is still off-safety and ready to fire. By making this mistake a hunter not only puts his own life in danger, he endangers the lives of other hunters.

Perhaps the greatest danger in deer hunting (especially in areas that are heavily populated with hunters) is that hunters often fail to look beyond their target when taking aim at a deer. In some areas of thick

Death of a sportsman amid nature's wonders

by Kurt Helker
Special to the Pointer

The sight of a red-winged blackbird bobbing on a sun-bleached cattail brought me back to my senses. I had been in a sort of reverie, a state easily brought about by a combination of sun, warm breezes, and the intoxicating headiness of a day alone in the field. I leaned back against a fencepost and relaxed, enjoying the morning from my hilltop vantage point. Geometric fields and winding marshes stretched alternately before my sight like gems dropped from the hand of God. In an overgrown fencerow of the nearest field, a farmer halfheartedly swung a brush axe, the sun flashing on the blade as he worked. I knew the farmer could not see me from where he was. This made me feel a bit like an intruder, despite the fact that I was free to hunt as far as the eye could see. I got up to leave, picking my gun from its resting place in the moss and leaf litter. It was time to move, and so I left, humming to myself.

The marshes beckoned and I followed. Morning sun shone warmly on the blue-green mat of floating vegetation, and the oozing mire which I disturbed with my bare feet at every step gave off that curious smell which outsiders and city dwellers find offensive, but which "marsh rats" consider more alluring than the best perfume. The marshes, glistening with dew, and the waning summer, droned in familiar, drowsy monotony. A squirrel chattered in the nearby wood, and I stopped to listen, liking the feel of the marsh gumbo squishing between my toes as I shifted my weight from foot to foot. I dismissed all thought of killing the squirrel. It would remain in its tree, enjoying the day as I was, and I would continue happily on my way. If a rabbit jumped from the dry sedge patches bordering the marsh, I thought, I would probably kill it, but with no malice. "With no malice aforethought," thought I, trying to recall where I'd heard that as I felt the salve of midday sun on my back. The long days of summer had taught me well in the art of refraining from thinking deeply, and I knew that it would take my pleasantly lethargic mind awhile to become acclimated to the rigors of school just begun. I walked on, skirting the thick reeds bordering a deep, tannin-stained creek which led to a small pothole.

It was then that I saw them. They were at the far end of the pothole, dabbling contentedly and preening errant feathers with gaudy bills. 'Wood ducks,' I thought. 'Seven of them.' I noted the iridescent greens and oranges of the males, and I noted too the pleased soft whistle of the feeding females. And then, horribly, for reasons I cannot comprehend, or perhaps more horribly for reasons I cannot comprehend because they did not exist, I raised my gun and fired, though the ducks were sitting on the water and were not yet legal game. Above the austere steel of the gun barrel I could see the frantic gray wingbeats of hapless ducks, and I heard the ebbing whistles of the dying. I lowered the gun. Through the oily smoke of gunpowder, I saw the stricken forms of the ducks. I had ejected the last shell from the gun's chamber when a wounded male, desperately urging itself on with all-too-audible cries, attempted to fly from the reed mat where it had lain unseen. I jacked a shell into the chamber, raised the gun, and fired for a last time, centering the gun's bead on a heaving chest. The report of the gun echoed through marshes and woodlands, farmyards and fields, before finally returning to me in the form of awful realization of what I had done. The duck had now ceased its twitching and lay still on the water.

I sat down hard as the enormity of my sin fell upon my shoulders like a millstone. I had violated the way of the sportsman. I stood, staring straight ahead, as hot tears of sorrow threatened to wind their way down my burning cheeks. It took the fear of being discovered for me to take action and retrieve the duck cadavers. I stepped into the ooze, that treacherous goo sucking me deeper into the quagmire with each labored step. I reached the ducks with some difficulty; they lay where they fell, for the most part, their flat gray floating bellies a mute testimony to a great injustice. I retrieved the carcasses and headed for shore as lightning flashed in the suddenly somber afternoon sky. I lurched onto shore and retreated to the forest just as dingy skies began to cast down their grief.

Sheltered in the woods, I examined the ducks, turning their dead weights over and over in my hands. Matted feathers which once shone brightly in the spring sun now ran thickly with blood, and eyes once clear and glinting were now glazed in death. The normally vivid greens, whites, oranges and browns of wood duck plumage appeared drab and cheerless. I piled their bodies into a mound. What were once woodland sprites darting low over remote watersheds were now simply slabs of meat raked into a heap.

I seized my gun, threw it into a tangle of briars, and hung my head between my legs, fully intending to stay where I was until the despairing specters of guilt had vanished from my mind. I was in this sorry state when I heard the squeals and wingbeats from the pond. I bolted upright, swiveling my head and listening intently to make sure. Yes, they were ducks. Thinking that perhaps a wounded duck had hidden itself from the relentless lead onslaught like the last one, I retrieved my gun from the briars. Eyes stinging, I breathed deeply and crept slowly to the marsh, utilizing cattails and tall grasses as concealment. At water's edge I stood up and surveyed the pond. I saw not a moribund or injured duck, or even a healthy one, but instead only my own reflection amidst the floating feathers.

Cutting into the land marks man and nature

I have read many definitions of what is a conservationist, and written not a few myself, but I suspect that the best one is written not with a pen, but with an axe. It is a matter of what a man thinks about while chopping, or while deciding what to chop. A conservationist is one who is humbly aware that with each stroke he is writing his signature on the face of his land. Signatures of course differ, whether written with axe or pen, and this is as it should be.

I find it disconcerting to analyze, ex post facto, the reasons behind my own axe-in-hand decisions. I find, first of all, that not all trees are created free and equal. Where a white pine and a red birch are crowding each other, I have an a priori bias; I always cut the birch to favor the pine. Why?

Well, first of all, I planted the pine with my shovel, whereas the birch crawled in under the fence and planted itself. My bias is thus to some extent paternal, but this cannot be the whole story, for if the pine were a natural seedling like the birch, I would value it even more. So I must dig deeper for the logic, if any, behind my bias.

The birch is an abundant tree in my township and becoming more so, whereas pine is scarce and becoming scarcer; perhaps my bias is for the underdog. But, what would I do if my farm were further north, where pine is abundant and red birch is scarce? I confess I don't know. My farm is here.

The pine will live for a century, the birch for half that; do I fear that my signature will fade? My neighbors have planted no pines but all have many birches; am I snobbish about having a woodlot of distinction? The pine stays green all winter, the birch punches the clock in October; do I favor the tree that, like myself, braves the winter wind? The pine will shelter a grouse but the birch will feed him; do I consider bed more important than board? The pine will ultimately bring ten dollars a thousand, the birch two dollars; have I an eye on the bank? All of these possible reasons for my bias seem to carry some weight, but none of them carries very much.

So I try again, and here perhaps is something; under this pine will ultimately grow a trailing arbutus, an Indian pipe, a pyrola, or a twin flower, whereas under the birch a bobble gentian is about the best to be hoped for. In this pine a pileated woodpecker will ultimately chisel out a nest; in the birch a hairy will have to suffice. In this pine the wind will sing for me in April, at which time the birch is only rattling naked twigs. These possible reasons for my bias carry weight, but why?

Besadny to speak

Carrol "Buzz" Besadny, secretary of the DNR, will speak on current issues at the Society of American Foresters-Student Chapter UWSP Annual Fall Banquet. The banquet will be held Dec. 5 at the House of Prime in Plover, located southeast of US 51 & Hwy. 54. The evening will commence at 5:30 with a social hour, including free beer. This sociable time gives students an opportunity to meet professionals and forestry alumni from all over Wisconsin. An all-you-can-eat buffet style dinner, which includes roast beef, broasted chicken, and French fried haddock will be served at 6:30; Mr. Besadny will speak at 7:30. A drawing for several hundred dollars worth of door prizes will take place at 8:30. A country-rock band called "The Gamblers" will perform from 9-12:30.

The H.O.P. bus will shuttle people at 5 and 5:30 p.m. from Depot Center; a ride home will also be provided. Dress is semi-formal. Tickets are $7 and can be purchased in room 321A in the CNR until Dec. 4, 1985. Due to the broad nature of C.B. Besadny's topic all CNR majors are encouraged to attend.

Wildlifers offer nuisance help

University News Service

An information service to assist people whose property is being disturbed by birds and small wild animals has been reactivated for this school year at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

It's named the Human/Wildlife Conflict Abatement Program and it is being operated by members of the student chapter of the Wildlife Society.

The service is free; however, a small mileage fee will be assessed if homeowners in Portage County request the students to assist at the site. The information can be obtained by calling the office of Professor Raymond Anderson at 346-3665.

Anderson says the most common kinds of problems reported to his office have been strange noises in the attic, woodpeckers on the house, woodchucks in the garden and skunks under the porch.

Homeowners with one of the most common problems, mice in the house, are advised to use a trap baited with peanut butter instead of poison.

Earthweek help needed today

When you've already done something well all you can hope to do is perfect it. We want to perfect EARTHWEEK '86, and we need everyone's help to do it.

EARTHWEEK is a celebration of Earth. It's a celebration of the environment around us, both natural and human. It will involve excellent music, educative movies, slide shows, entertaining and provocative speakers, area elementary school programs and rallies. These are some of the activities, only some, that we have had in the past. These and many more are what we are hoping to have during EARTHWEEK '86 which is tentatively planned for April 22-26.

In the past, programming and running EARTHWEEK has been the job of volunteers from the College of Natural Resources, particularly members of the Environmental Educators and Naturalists Association (EENA).

In the past, EENA has decided the theme, main objectives and activities of EARTHWEEK. Unfortunately the base of knowledge and ideas that we have worked from has been restricted to what we have studied at UWSP. Involvement from other academic fields outside the College of Natural Resources has been sparse at best.

For EARTHWEEK '86 we want to expand our base of knowledge from which we work in order to perfect EARTHWEEK '86. We want to present a fuller, more well-rounded program. We want to get the ideas and participation of philosophers, psychologists, home economists, politicians, educators, and the huge number of academic fields which we find at UWSP. So come on!!! Let's see some participation from all the colleges on campus.

Although EARTHWEEK '86 is not until April, enthusiastic planning has already started. This is an invitation to every organization, every faculty member, and every student on campus to get involved in EARTHWEEK '86. Attend the next EARTHWEEK '86 planning meeting, scheduled for Wednesday, December 4 at 4:30. Themes, committees, keynote speakers and logos are on the agenda. (If you can't make it at 4:30, come late. Watch the Daily for what room.) We need your ideas, your participation, your help to perfect EARTHWEEK '86. For more information contact Eric Nei (341-8755) or Elizabeth Schmidt (345-0563).

Harassing Bears

Wyoming biologists want to harass grizzly bears by subjecting them to physical pain, loud noise and other unpleasant tortures. It's all part of a plan to save the bears' lives by teaching them that humans are an unruly lot, to be avoided at all costs.

Larry Roop, bear expert with the Wyoming Game and Fish Department, explains that grizzlies presently associate humans with food and respond by raiding camps, etc. The object of the new study is to alter bear behavior by teaching the bears to associate humans with pain and noise. Ultimately, this information might be passed on to other bears in the wild so that grizzlies, like other animals, will flee from humans.

Panda Taxonomy

Taxonomists beware! New research has shown that the lesser panda is not as closely related to the raccoon as it looks, and the giant panda is more of a bear than most biologists thought! Researchers from the National Cancer Institute and the National Zoo analyzed genes and proteins from pandas, raccoons, and bears. Their conclusion: lesser and giant pandas shared an ancestor until 30 to 50 million years ago, when three groups arose—one leading to raccoons, another to lesser pandas, and a third to giant pandas and bears.

Modern Sawmill More Efficient

According to the Minnesota Forestry Association, 1,650 cubic feet of logs were required to build the average U.S. home in 1970. Efficient new sawmills today can turn out the same amount of lumber from 1,350 cubic feet of logs—a savings of 18 percent in raw material!

Pointers stun River Falls in season finale

by Kent Walstrom
Sports Editor

UWSP, despite failing in its bid for a post-season playoff berth, finished their season in typical Pointer fashion by stunning WSUC champion River Falls, 23-19, in the slush and snow of Goerke Field here Saturday afternoon.

While the win lifted the Pointers (8-2-1) into sole possession of third place in the WSUC, it also knocked the previously unbeaten Falcons, who finished at 8-1-1, from playoff contention.

The NCAA district playoff selection committee on Sunday chose Central (8-0-0) and Coe (9-0-1), both from Iowa, along with Occidental, Calif. (8-1-0) and St. John's, Minn. (8-1-0). Central faces Coe and St. John's plays at Occidental in the opening round this Saturday.

The Pointers opened Saturday's season finale with a 23-point first half flurry, while the Falcons, ranked No. 7 and heavily dependent upon the wishbone offense that led the nation with an average of 353.1 rushing yards a game, faltered under the adverse weather conditions.

"Getting in front early was a big plus for us," said Coach D.J. LeRoy. "It's a lot tougher on the wishbone offense when you force them to play catch-up."

UWSP drove 84 yards in 11 plays for the game's first touchdown, as quarterback Dave Geissler snuck over from one yard out at the 9:49 mark. The PAT kick by Kim Drake, however, was wide to the left.

Early in the second quarter, the Pointers turned a 31-yard punt into their second scoring drive of the game. The 10-play march was capped by a 15-yard pass play from Geissler to end Guy Otte. Geissler then connected on a pass to halfback Mike Christian for the two-point conversion and a 14-0 lead with 12:45 remaining in the half.

The Pointers added their third touchdown with a nine-play, 56-yard drive, highlighted by an eight-yard scoring pass from Geissler to end Jim Lindholm with 2:32 left. Drake's PAT made it 21-0.

River Falls' Ritchie Narges slipped on the muddy turf while attempting to field the ensuing kickoff, forcing the Falcons to start from their own six yard line.

Quarterback Clark Luessman, while trying to locate a receiver from inside his own end zone, was nailed for a safety by a host of Pointers, led by linebacker Bill Kolodziej.

Starting again from their own 29 yard line and facing a 23 point deficit, the Falcons rallied behind Luessman to complete a 71-yard, nine-play scoring drive that shifted the momentum and resulted in a 22-7 halftime score.

UWSP outgained River Falls

249 to 106 in total yardage in the first half, with 201 of Point's yardage coming through the air.

Geissler, after enjoying another productive first half of play, found a rigid Falcon defense to contend with in the third period, and was sacked five times.

River Falls scored their second touchdown on a return interception by cornerback Ellis Wangelin, but Greg Dantoin added an interception of his own on the two-point conversion pass from Luessman to split end Tom Smith to hold the score to 23-13.

The Pointer offense, which performed dismally throughout the second half, struggled with poor field position and eventually set up River Falls' final touchdown.

A 13-yard punt return to the UWSP 35, along with a 15-yard personal foul penalty against the Pointers gave the Falcons the ball at the 20.

Fullback Greg Corning hit paydirt with 4:30 to play, but a miscue on the extra point attempt gave the Pointers a 23-19 edge.

The Falcons regained possession with 2:02 remaining and needing a touchdown for the victory, but the Pointers defense shut River Falls down with a staunch defensive effort that sealed the win.

"If you look at the season overall, this team accomplished a great deal," said LeRoy, attempting to put the season into perspective. "They (the team) certainly deserved everything they got this year. I just wish they could have went a little farther (entered post-season play)," LeRoy added.

The 1986 Pointers will lose the services of numerous seniors, all of whom drew praise from LeRoy. "These seniors reflect the best leadership I've seen since I've been coaching here at Stevens Point," LeRoy said bluntly.

Seniors not returning to next year's squad include: Dave Geissler, Dennis Lane, LeRoy Huckle, Jim Lindholm, Guy Otte, Eric Jones, Mark Rietveld, Ron Hinz, Tom Finco, Kurt Geissler, Mike Reutemann, Jaime Maliszewski and Breck Loos.

Lady Stickers place five on 1985 All-Conference team

by UWSP Sports
Information Office

STEVENS POINT—The UW-Stevens Point women's field hockey team is well represented on the 1985 WIM (Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota) All-Conference team. Kristen Kemerling and Sheila Downing are repeaters from last year's All-WIM squad, while Jaye Hallenbeck, Tina Roesken, and Colleen Kelly are being honored for the first time.

Kemerling, a senior from Moinee, was the Pointers' main offensive weapon as she led the conference in scoring with 21 goals and three assists.

Downing, a four-year member of the team, scored 10 goals and five assists. The senior from Wisconsin Rapids Lincoln enjoyed a big Midwest Regional Tournament, scoring the winning goals in two of the three games.

Hallenbeck, a senior co-captain from Appleton West, scored 12 goals and added three assists. Her aggressive style of play made her a key player.

Roesken, also a senior from Appleton West, was the team's third leading scorer with 11 goals and five assists. Her versatility was a major asset to the team, as she took the majority of the Pointers' penalty corner shots and also played defense against opponent's penalty corners.

Kelly, a senior co-captain from Mukwonago, headed the Lady Pointer defense while allowing only 13 goals all season.

Head coach Nancy Page expressed mixed emotions about the selections. "I'm very happy for these young women. They truly deserve the honor," said Page. "I'm just sorry the entire team wasn't selected, because we played as a team and were successful as a team."

The Lady Pointers, who once again competed in the NCAA Division III National Tournament, concluded their season with an impressive 18-3 record. Due to the lack of local competition, however, field hockey is being dropped from the UWSP athletic program. The Lady Pointers have accumulated a 229-89-33 record in their 20-year history.

Icers lose thriller in OT at Willett Arena

by Kent Walstrom
Sports Editor

At long last, UWSP's ice hockey program is starting to make some noise.

The Pointers of first year Coach Mark Mazzoleni registered their second split of the young season last weekend against a talented UW-Eau Claire team to maintain an even 2-2 record.

UWSP fought off a 2-2 tie with four second period goals to secure a 7-4 victory last Thursday, but lost in overtime to the Blugolds in Saturday's rematch here at Willett Arena.

On Thursday, the Blugolds drew first blood with an opening period power play goal by Tom Mann at the 7:24 mark. Pointer Tim Coghlin tied the game with a shot from the point, and two minutes later teammate Pete Manowski added an unassisted goal to give UWSP a 2-1 advantage. The Blugolds retaliated with their second power play goal to end the first period and knot the score at 2-2.

With an assist from Rick Fleming, Scott Dolan scored just 54 seconds into the second stanza to give the Pointers a 3-2 edge. Freshman Tim Comeau pushed the score to 4-2 with a goal at the 6:45 mark, followed by Dolan's second goal of the game at the halfway mark of the second period.

Pointer Mike Lohrengel was whistled for a roughing penalty seconds later, and Blugold Mark Squires took advantage of the power play situation by scoring to make it 5-3. Pointer Rick Fleming countered with a beautiful backhand shot to lift UWSP into a 6-3 lead entering the final period.

The Pointers traded goals with Eau Claire in the third period, with Scott Kuberra scoring off his own rebound to end the game with UWSP on top 7-4.

"Scott (Kuberra) and Rick (Fleming) worked very hard this evening, but overall it was a sloppy game," commented Mazzoleni. "As a result, we didn't execute our system as well as we could have, but it was nice to get the victory."

The Blugolds traveled to UWSP's Willett Arena for a rematch on Saturday, and came away with a thrilling 5-4 overtime victory.

"Eau Claire played a much better game tonight than they did Thursday," Mazzoleni observed. "They deserve a lot of credit."

UWSP opened the scoring nine minutes into the first period on a power play goal by Bobby Engelhart. The Blugolds tied the score a minute later, then scored the go-ahead goal at the 12:34 mark on a deflected shot by Tom Mann.

Rick Fleming, with assists from Jim Klenk and Mike Lohrengel, scored to tie the game at 2-2, but Blugold Paul Lynch scored at 14:04 of the second period to recapture the lead.

P. Schlanock Photo

The pointers, now 2-2, sport a young but much-improved team this season.

Both teams were held scoreless until Pointer Scott Dolan netted a power play goal to even the score at 3-3 with just under 15 minutes left in the game.

Fleming added another goal on an assist from Dolan midway through the stanza to give the Pointers a 4-3 lead, but penalty trouble in the latter stages of the period allowed the Blugolds to score on a power play goal and tie the game at 4-4.

With both teams at full strength, Rob Crothers powered in the winning goal for the Blugolds just 1:51 into the overtime period.

Despite dominating Eau Claire in shots on goal 48-18, Mazzoleni expressed disappointment in his team's play. "There were a number of factors that could have contributed to our slow start," said Mazzoleni. "The fact that it was our home opener with such a large crowd may have been one reason. I think my players were pressing too hard to do well, and as a result were unable to execute."

The Pointers will host perennial power Mankato State University this weekend at Willett Arena. Friday night's game is slated for 7:30 while Saturday's game will start at 2 p.m.

Pointers show promise at Northern Open

by UWSP Sports Information Office

MARQUETTE, Mich. — The UW-Stevens Point wrestling team showed some early season promise, as nine out of the squad's 20 wrestlers placed in the Northern Open Wrestling Tournament held at Northern Michigan University this past weekend.

Placing in the tournament were Scott Fredrickson (118) and Bill Zakrzewski (190), both finishing thirds and Ryan Burns (126), Gerald King (139), John Noble (150) and Gene Sheehan (177), placing fourth.

Team captain Bob Calnin (142) captured fifth place, while Joe McPhail (142) and Jay Labecki (158) garnered sixth place finishes.

Pointer wrestling coach Duane Groshek felt the team's performance in the tournament was able improvement on the mat," said Groshek. "Two or three of our wrestlers were pitted against people who had beaten or pinned them last weekend typical for this stage of the season. "I feel we're making notice-and their matches were much closer this time. "This is a sign of good conditioning, as well as a 'never give up and never quit' attitude which we want to develop as the foundation of our program."

"Our approach to this season," continued Groshek, "is to have our wrestlers at the peak of their performance during the post-season tournaments. At this point in the season, we are wrestling as well as I would like to see."

The Pointer wrestlers will grapple again on Wednesday, December 4th in a double dual meet with UW-Eau Claire and Augsburg College at Eau Claire.

Cagers look to '85-'86 season

by Kent Walstrom
Sports Editor

The UWSP men's basketball team, playing under the new direction of first year coach Jay Eck, is set to kick off the 1985-86 season with the Tip-Off Tournament held here in the Quandt Fieldhouse this weekend.

St. Norbert College will square off against nationally ranked St. Thomas Aquinas while UWSP faces a much improved UW-Milwaukee team on Friday night, with the winners to play for the championship and the losers for the consolation on Saturday.

The Pointers have lost All-American Terry Porter and Mike Janse, both guards, to graduation, but return a promising but young corps of players for the 85-86 campaign.

Heading the list of returnees is veteran center Kirby Kulas, a 6'7" senior who led the Pointers in both rebounds (179) and blocked shots (26) from a year ago. Kulas, a co-captain who has assumed the role of leader on this year's squad, also averaged 11.4 points per game.

Kulas will be joined by teammate Tim Naegeli, a 6'7", 180 pound junior out of Racine, Wis. Naegeli, who will see duty at both center and forward this season, averaged 10.7 points per game and totaled 145 rebounds while leading the team with a 64.3 shooting percentage last year.

Dimitric Roseboro saw action in 30 games last season at a guard position, finishing second on the team behind Porter in assists with 107.

Scott Koepnick, a 6'2", 165 pound guard, played a reserve role for the Pointers last season but also looks to see added playing time.

Senior Jeff Olson had a hand in 23 Pointer games last season, averaging 9.1 points and three assists per game as a forward and starts the season as the other co-captain (along with Kulas).

Coach Eck also likes the potential of transfer student Walter Grain, a product of Parkland Junior College. Grain, a 6'4", 190 pound junior, should see plenty of action as a forward.

Junior Keith Kulas rounds out the starting prospects for the season-opening tourney. Keith, the younger brother of team captain Kirby Kulas, will also share duty at either center or guard. The 6'5", 190 pounder saw limited action last season, but his duties should be increased substantially.

Guard Rod Chamble heads the list of reserves, as the freshman from Chicago has impressed Eck in practice and could earn some court time at a guard position.

"This team is starting to gel like we anticipated it would," said Eck, who replaces former mentor Dick Bennett. "The tour-namment will be a good test for us."

Eck, in assessing his team's potential for the coming season, stressed the necessity for teamwork as a main objective of his early season practices. While he expects continued improvement throughout the season, it will obviously take the experience of game situations before Eck can fully judge the limits of his ball club.

And while the Pointers continue to mature and develop the talent necessary to challenge for the conference crown, a lingering question remains: With four previous WSUC titles, three NAIA District 14 Championships, and a combined four year record of 101-19, what can the Pointers do for an encore?

Harriers fourth at Regionals

by Wade Turner
Staff reporter

The UWSP men's cross country team narrowly missed qualifying for Nationals as they finished fourth at the NCAA Div. III Regionals in Rock Island, Illinois with 106 points.

The teams which finished ahead of Point at the Midwest Regional included North Central, 50; Wheaton, 64; and UW-Oshkosh, 97. The top three teams from each regional across the country qualify for the national meet in Atlanta, GA.

Arnie Schraeder, a junior from Nekoosa, took the individual title, covering the five-mile course with a 25:06 clocking. Senior Don Reiter was close behind, garnering a third place overall finish en route to a 25:22 clocking. Both qualified individually to compete at the Div. III Nationals in Atlanta this Saturday.

Coach Rick Witt was quite pleased with the overall performance of the team. "I felt Arnie (Schraeder) and Don (Reiter) ran super," said Witt. "I also felt our other runners ran up to their capabilities, and that's all a coach can ask for."

Witt also stated that his third through seventh runners made a more conscious effort to run as a pack. "I felt we ran much better than we did at conference," said Witt. "We were able to pack guys in and run more as a team."

Jim Kowalczyk, Kevin Seay, and Mike Nelson placed 33rd through 35th, while Bob Hujik and Thomas Schnell finished 39th and 50th, respectively.

"I have no complaints in the way we ran," Witt added. "I feel everyone gave a maximum effort, but we simply got beat by better teams on this particular day."

stantly being raped by the formula sex of the advertising industry in its constant attempt to seduce the consumer," she contends.

"The pieces also looks at the whitewashing of violence against women by the music and television industries," she adds. It will be danced by a sextet of three men and three women on an original tape collage by Michael Mettlich of Wisconsin Rapids.

Ms. Studd's other work, "Like Is Like..." is a theatre piece about human non-verbal communication and interaction. The choreographer says, "It concentrates on the context of a gesture to create meaning or absurdity." The dance will be performed by 12 students, to the accompaniment of silence, speaking parts, audience reaction and a few musical excerpts from "2001."

Faculty member Susan Hughes Gingrasso also has contributed two concert pieces.

"Zoom" is an abstract ballet danced by Meenakshy Bhaskar of India and Beth A. Dietrich of Watertown. According to the choreographer, the work shapes a dance image of the different aspects of the verb, "to zoom." It is set to music by Milan Stiblj and performed by the Uharrie Clarinet-Perussion Duo.

Ms. Gingrasso also has remounted "America" from "West Side Story," originally choreographed by Jerome Robbins and restaged by James Moore. She says, "Audiences familiar with the film version of 'West Side Story' will find this work taken from the Broadway production to be very different in style and feeling." It will be danced by 10 students.

Faculty member Linda Caldwell describes her piece, "Fantasy for a Few Good Men" as, "at times" a humorous look at male aggressive fantasy." Five performers "dance and sing with energy and exuberance" to the accompaniment of a tape collage, ranging from a modern cowboy's vision to the Duke of Windsor's abdication speech.

A work-in-progress, "Conversations," also choreographed by Caldwell, stems from rehearsal experiments in the use of voice and movement. The dance, performed by 13 women, is "a celebration of modern life with its freedoms and grave dangers." The styles of hard jazz and theatrical devices form the choreography with the dancers utilizing speaking parts.

A classical ballet, the "Don Quixote" pas de deux from the ballet, "Don Quixote," has been remounted for the concert by Moore. It will be performed by Millard and Litzl Schoff of Rockford, Ill. Moore says, "it is the most popular and frequently done of the classic 'bravura' showpieces." The original work, set to music by Leon Minkus, was choreographed by Marius Petipa and premiered in 1861 in Russia.

tion. The Heart Healthy Dining program enlists area restaurants to prepare low-fat food and specify the healthy selections on the menu.

Besides the positive effects they have on our campus' health, the Lifestyle Assistants program also benefits the Assistants themselves. According to Dr. Bill Hettler, this program has already become well-known throughout the country. "If a student has worked as an L.A. here, it is guaranteed that they will get a position when they graduate," he said.

L.A. Greg Hagan agreed. Hagan, who already holds a degree in nursing, said, "When I was in nursing school, they didn't teach us this. Now I'm learning how to help people understand that they have choices about their health."

The L.A.'s, chosen by Weston and Hettler, come from a variety of different majors, including phy. ed., biology, psychology, communications, and dietetics. These students will probably seek a variety of different jobs when they graduate, but many will probably work in the Wellness field in corporations, schools, hospitals, and organizations such as the YMCA.

More information about the services provided by the Lifestyle Assistants can be easily obtained by calling the Health Center at 346-4646.

that I wanted to be my own knight in shining armour.

About this time, one of my friends from high school had recently gotten married and was expecting her first child. She provided me with lengthy details about her morning sickness and her visits to the doctor. She also insisted that I keep up to date with her baby bottle collection. She was puzzled because I wasn't absolutely tickled when she handed me an invitation to her first Tupperware party. At that point, I was ready to confess! No, I didn't clip yummy recipes from Sunday journals; nor did I greet the Avon lady at my doorstep every Saturday afternoon.

Then the sermonette began. "Why are you taking poetry and creative writing classes? Don't you know that shorthand and typing classes will get you a good job if that's what you want? Why, when I was your age, I had a husband and three children...By the way, when was the last time you saw that nice young man who's studying to be a doctor?"

Today's woman should feel free to ignore her sister's blind-date proposals and to reject her mother's plea for grandchildren. She must feel comfortable in choosing to be different from the ideal generic woman. Today's woman must trust herself.

ment reward program. Rewards may be paid to any person who can provide information that leads to the resolution of an act of vandalism, theft, or arson of state property, or false fire alarms, Burling explained.

The program began statewide approximately four years ago, Burling said, but was not introduced to our campus until the fall of 1983.

Burling feels the Reward Program is a good one, despite the fact it has only been used twice since it began two years ago. It is set up to help deter any type of vandalism to state property.

It is to everyone's benefit, Burling said, because if thousands of dollars of damage is done to state property someone has to pay and it could end up causing an increase in fees.

ers. In a very real sense, every hunter faces the responsibility of maintaining sound public relations, a job only made more difficult by irresponsible hunters.

It would be wise, I think, for hunters to police their own ranks. That is, higher standards of ethical behavior are called for and only by hunters applying pressure to fellow hunters to meet those standards can ethical behavior be improved. Perhaps as you listen to your bag limit of deer hunting stories in the next few weeks, you will run across some hunters who suffer from ethical illiteracy. What better time to voice your opinion of their actions. Do it for hunting's sake.

Band, cont.

be enough funding from SGA to transport 30 to 40 people around the state," says John Lundeen, student president of the band.

They have not, as yet, learned how much money will be available to them.

UWSP issues one academic credit to anyone who wishes to play with the University Band; the course is entitled Music 144.

The student is graded on attendance of the two practice sessions held on Tuesday and Thursday of each week at 4:00 p.m., for one hour, in the Fine Arts Building. Andrea Rosen welcomes phone calls from any students. Rosen can be reached at X4053.

Rosen, as well as the other student musicians, welcome attendance at their performance this month in Michelsen Hall, Fine Arts Building. It begins at 8:15 p.m. on Monday, November 25, and is open to the public without charge. "Right now we hold one concert per semester," she said, "but next semester we already have two scheduled. One of them is on March 16 at the SENTRY Theatre, where we will be joining all the other UWSP bands. This is a nice honor." The second program will again be held in Michelsen Hall, where the University Band will join the Symphonic Orchestra in a performance on May 1. Again, the show is guaranteed to please anyone who attends.

Jeremiah's cont.

Frontier Fries and various sandwiches — and have always been satisfied. For this reason I would return to Jeremiah's.

Another reason to return is the atmosphere and the service. Our food was served within fifteen minutes of our placing the order. I thought that was very efficient, because when we were there, almost every table was filled. Also, though the restaurant was very full, I could talk with my friend and listen to the music. It was relaxing.

The drinks section of the menu also impressed me, though I am, admittedly, easily impressed by such things. Jeremiah's has a good selection of domestic beers, both on tap and in bottles plus they stock over fifteen brands of beer and ale from around the world. Cocktails, highballs and wines are also available. The selection of drinks is further supplemented by a good selection of non-alcoholic beverages.

getting a good grade from your English professor. It means getting a job, advancing in that job, and having your ideas known by your co-workers. It is money in your pocket.

There really is a use for comparison and contrast essays in the real world.

So go ahead. Complain, holler, even whine about that last writing assignment—I'm a writer and I do. But don't dismiss it as trivial. Someday your boss may want you to write a report on the causes and effects of eating lunch while you are handling company documents.

Nontrad classes rising

In response to the growing numbers of nontraditional students on the UWSP campus, departments are scheduling more classes at times convenient for these students. Over 2,000 "non-trads" are on campus this year. Enrollments are expected to keep increasing.

Continuing Education and Outreach has a brochure with information on late afternoon, evening, and weekend classes offered at UWSP and off-campus. The office is located in the Student Services Center.

Nontraditional students are those who are over 25 years old and are beginning college or have had a break in their college education.

swamp or pine plantations, the background is now always clear. I passed up the chance to shoot a six point buck last season because, when taking aim at the deer, I picked up hunter's orange in my scope. I hunt in an area of thick pines and popple slashings, so I may not have seen the hunter if I hadn't been using a scope.

When making drives for deer, always know where the other drivers and posters of your party are located, along with anyone else who might be posted in the area.

Safety during the deer season, with gun or without, cannot be compromised. The privilege to hunt depends upon responsibility, not only to yourself, but every other sportsman in the woods.

Piccadeli, cont.

For my lunch, I ordered a croissant with turkey, roast beef, and mozzarella, some chips, and a medium soda. The total price came to $3.37. Although I ordered my sandwich "hot," it was served lukewarm with the cheese barely melted. If I had known that it wouldn't have been hot, I would have saved the service person the trouble and microwaved it myself near the Encore room. The service was also very slow—definitely not fast food.

My recommendation is to skip Piccadeli. They don't do anything you can't do yourself (except make ice cream, I suppose).

Bring a sandwich from home for half the price, save your money, and treat yourself to a terrific Friday fish fry or some other meal at a good restaurant off-campus. You'll get better service, more variety, and much more for your money.

one ratio of men to women makes it a seller's market for the fat girls. There is nothing else to hit on here except fat girls so the landwhales just assume that since they have no problem getting dates that it's all right to be fat. Another factor in the unusually large number of fat girls is the crowd that the university attracts. This campus, located in the middle of farm country, attracts a large number of plump farm girls. Finally we must look at the food service on campus. Debot and Allen food centers offer unlimited seconds and a self serve dessert bar.

I have often asked myself what I would do if I were put in the same situation that the girls of this campus must find themselves in. What would I do if I went to a school where there were four girls for every boy? Albeit I would probably have the time of my life, I might also be tempted to worry much less about the way I looked. I feel that this is a major reason for the sheer tonnage of flesh on this campus. When I was going to high school it used to bother me when girls would bitch about how fat they were. I now realize that I dreadfully miss the words "God, I'm sooo fat!" I see so few girls running or doing any exercise whatever that I cannot help but believe that the girls here just aren't very concerned with the fact that they are disgusting.

Another reason for the excess weight of the females of Stevens Point is the fact that the campus attracts a creature that I had been sheltered from as a child. No, it is not some medieval monster living in Schmeekle but rather a gelatinous mass of quivering flesh known as "THE POTATO FARMER'S DAUGHTER." Whether it is the fact that farmer's daughters are supposed to be large in order to do work around the farm or because farm boys enjoy a big woman, the fact is that most of these animals more resemble oxen than the frail little girls that I grew up with. This university, which is famous for its college of natural resources, attracts many of these fat girls who are looking to land themselves a nice forester for a husband. And the flannel wearing CNR men don't seem to mind. When talking with one of these tree-cops about the fat girls here I was met with the response "I'd rather have two-hundred pounds of curves than ninety pounds of nerves! Hey?" How can one help but lose faith when confronted with that kinds of attitude?

In our in-depth study of the fat girls here we cannot fail to look at the food service. Not all of the fat girls on this campus were fat before they came here. A girl, whom I will call Jane, came to this institutionalized learning facility weighing in at a little over one-hundred and five pounds. She now weighs at least twenty-five pounds more than that. This is a girl who used to be very weight conscious. What happened? Debot happened. Debot with its unlimited seconds and self serve snack bar was just too much for her. When we were in high school we got just one hot lunch. Here you can have four servings of "taccaroni," four glasses of coke, and three servings of blueberry pie and I've seen many girls do just that. I don't know if this is part of the so-called "wellness" program that the university claims to have or not. When I presented that question to "Betty Debot," the person who answers question put in the suggestion box, I got a very vague, noncommittal answer. She must be fat too.

Well, as is now readily apparent to you I am both sympathetic and disgusted with the plight of the Stevens Point fat girls. I understand that the girls here must find themselves in a situation conducive to obesity and may have even been brought up to believe that it is okay to be overweight. I realize that really munching out at Debot is a big temptation, but I think that the girls should know that many others share my point of view and are as willing as I am to drive any distance to find that beautiful creature, "THE SKINNY GIRL."

To understand much of what we're doing with respect to cancer research, you'd need a graduate degree in microbiology or biochemistry.

But to understand how well our educational programs and service resources help both patients and their families, simply talk to one out of every 100 Americans who are part of our volunteer program. Or talk to one of the 3 million who've survived cancer.

The battle isn't over, but we are winning.

this week's highlight

Friday and Saturday, November 22 & 23

Tip-Off Tourney — And here come the Pointers...

That's right, it's time for the 1985-86 Pointers to kick off their season this weekend in the second annual Tip-Off Tourney. The defending conference champion Pointers will sport a new look in the form of new head coach Jay Eck this year. The Pointers look to be a strong team again this year, and this is the perfect chance to get a jump on the rest of the fans by seeing the Pointers participate in this four team tourney. All the action takes place in Quandt Gym, both evenings.

SPORTS

Friday and Saturday, November 22 & 23

Ice Hockey — The Pointer skaters are showing a complete turn around from past seasons, and are on the winning track. The Pointers are coming off a good weekend against the Blugolds of UW-Eau Claire and this weekend face off against the tough Mankato State team. The action takes place both evenings at Willett Arena at 7:30.

CINEMA SCOPE

Tuesday and Wednesday, December 3 & 4

"It's A Wonderful Life" — UFS is happy to present this fine film. In one of his best performances, James Stewart portrays a man who feels worthless, yet comes to realize his importance after an angel shows him what life in the town would be like without his presence. Showing both nights at 7:30 and 9:30 in room 333 of the Comm. building.

WWSP 90FM presents JAZZ-FEST December 6, 7, and 8. From 6 p.m. Friday until 12 midnight Sunday, 90FM brings you 54 hours of the finest in traditional and contemporary jazz. And, in conjunction with UAB Concerts, WWSP invites you to attend two concerts in the U.C. Encore room. Be there Friday evening at 9 p.m. for Duos, and Saturday night at the same time for Oceans, and catch two of Wisconsin's hottest jazz ensembles. Both concerts are free and open to the public.

Religion in America will be the topic of WWSP's "In Depth Radio," Monday, November 25 at 5:30 p.m. Join Kathy Mihailovic and her guests as they discuss religion in the United States and on the UWSP campus. All listeners will have an opportunity to have their comments and questions aired as well.

Listen to WWSP 90FM "For a Change."

PERSONAL: Hey Nat! Here's your personal that I promised. It's the first one on the list too! Don't have much to say but have a great Thanksgiving. Love, B.S.

PERSONAL: Lake Geneva or Bust: A wild and crazy weekend to be sure. Don't worry Charlie, we believe that you were just talking to a lonely teacher — late at night — down by the lake — but who were you with? Kristy — Who's coming down? We know you were with Scorp. Hogs and Kisses.

PERSONAL: S.G. The bucks will be in trouble when you get out in the woods. Have a great break and take 'er easy on the "Old Crow"! I'll be thinking about you. Love, M.V.

PERSONAL: Pat Hopkins: What was the reason you didn't go to Oshkosh? Was it because you couldn't get the van? Denise.

PERSONAL: Heather: Hi! It's me again. I have not forgotten about Ella's. Be nice, Heather. At least drop it off the wallet and what is in it at my house. E.M. Berg.

PERSONAL: Hey Kelley R: I'll meet you at Scott Neubert Thurs. Nov. 21 in the Encore at 9:00 to plot against Pat H. Denise J.

PERSONAL: Uncle Wood and Kitty: The Big Adventure in Tomahawk was great, huh? I think "Dale" and Scuf's miss us a lot! I get to see them all summer. From, Onion Tater.

PERSONAL: D. Just wanted to say you're the best roomie. Let's enjoy our penthouse while we can. Let's make it a wonderful ending to a wild semester. Zipper.

PERSONAL: Warning: It has been reported that Debby Deerslayer will be left loose in the Mead Wildlife area Saturday. Hunters beware!

PERSONAL: To the Wonderful Women of 3-S Knutzen: Have a Great Thanksgiving break! Your "lovable" RA.

PERSONAL: Tammy — you are right. All men are dirt! H.

PERSONAL: Dear Cli and Max, my two favorite men, Happy Thanksgiving and Happy Hunting. Love, Tigerlady.

PERSONAL: Jules and Carpy: I just wanted to say "Hi" to two of the greatest people I know. I love ya, Jude.

PERSONAL: I'm gonna cry if I don't get my keys back! Janel.

PERSONAL: To the 1985 Football Cheerleading Squad: You're the best! The year has just been fantastic working with all of you! Great job with competition Sunday. (No more Axel F!!) Thanks to all of you for a super season. Chris, Tim, and Julie.

PERSONAL: Uncle W — Next time, take your 8 x 10 to the movies.

PERSONAL: To 2-North Steiner: You women are the best. I couldn't think of a better wing to live on. Have a good Thanksgiving!

PERSONAL: Hey 1-south Thomson: You women are the best. We deserve to be wing of the month always. Oooo, I like when that happens. Love, R.A.

PERSONAL: J.K. Greetings from the Birdman!

PERSONAL: Jim: I'm glad you're you! You're even better than Sly. I'm looking forward to Turkey Break, it'll be great. Keep Smilin! Love, Stretch.

PERSONAL: Greg: Chin-up kid, things can only get better. Hope your Thanksgiving is happy. Love ya, Z-wrench.

PERSONAL: Baba Schutz: Thanks for transportation, beer, smokes? and all the rest. Paul Young would love ya. Let's party Thursdays now (thank you Wayne). And we'll pick up Chuck in December. Sammy.

PERSONAL: To my inspiration, the love of my life, my sweetheart, etc., etc. I love you now more than chocolate. Let's stop living vicariously and start really experiencing — or does that, like wine, take time too?

PERSONAL: Dear Kim: Forewarn your household Earthday is April 22. It's going to be great. Bev, Ann, Debby.

PERSONAL: Nellie, Thanks for being such a good friend! You are that one special person to me here at Point. Love, Your best friend.

PERSONAL: 3-West: A nice place to visit but...You guys are awesome. Have a good one. R.A.

PERSONAL: Hey little Quishums: Thank you for a super weekend! Christmas is going to be so fun and it's all because you are so special. Love, Punkin Seed.

PERSONAL: Keri, Even if you are behind a door you will still steal the show. You are awesome! Break a leg. Tricia.

PERSONAL: Thomson Staff: Did we find Bernie yet? If not, we can wait another hour. Thank you may I have another Minocqua east to Pakistan. This will not be soon forgotten. Love, T and J.

PERSONAL: Barb and Sam: Just a little note to say thanks so much for putting up with me lately, especially last Saturday when I needed you guys. You two are the greatest. "Who's Boofing Who?" Love ya, Lisa.

PERSONAL: Doug Stober: Hey Pal, thanks for being such a quality friend. I know times are few when we're together, but they are always great!! Love, Jenny.

PERSONAL: Barb, Lisa, and Chuck: You know Chuck, don't you? Just ask Bobo. Bobo, wait! Time to mix the drinks. Madison trip once again. Make sure Jim is kidnapped better. Sammy.

PERSONAL: Thanks for being you I east Hyer, Carpy and Tim. You betcha we love ya. Why Gus? Why? Just Cut! Mary, Kris and Jeanne.

PERSONAL: Kins: I am more of an Ernie Valgas. Good luck finding out who he is.

PERSONAL: Cool People: See you at the Frog's gig Sat. 8 p.m. UC Encore.

PERSONAL: John—I'm glad to see you finally got it right. Come on over to visit sometime. L.

PERSONAL: Wayne—Don't go Hawaiian! Go Illinoisan. K.

PERSONAL: Kins: I know I am not the great Grets. I still have my upper two front teeth.

PERSONAL: Laurie N.B.: Your smurf has no deek! You can't have my bike. I don't know she didn't come home last night!! Boys in the room? No, no, Love Jude.

PERSONAL: Lizard Lips: Can we borrow your TV sometime? Put it in the showers! L and K.

PERSONAL: Desperately seeking Carl, we like it when you're on top.

PERSONAL: Hey Bazooka buddy! Sorry I can't make Happy Hour—save some gum for me. The Doc.
