Prof arrested for allegedly taping boys

Longtime math instructor caught with video camera in duffel bag at YMCA, bond set at $20,000

By Mike Kemmeter
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

A 60-year-old UW-Stevens Point mathematics professor could face felony charges after he was arrested Monday night for allegedly videotaping boys in the Stevens Point YMCA locker room.

At a bond hearing Wednesday afternoon for Prof. Gordon L. Miller, Portage County District Attorney Thomas Eagon said there is a "potential for at least two dozen charges" against Miller.

Miller

Police are still collecting evidence and charges could include making a videotape that depicts nudity without the knowledge or consent of the person being taped, Eagon said.

Videotapes collected by police include "numerous young boys in the locker room, nude, changing into their swimming suits," Eagon said.

Miller could face two years in prison and a $10,000 fine for each count, Eagon said.

Although no formal charges were filed Wednesday, Portage County Branch 3 Circuit Judge Thomas Flugar ruled there is probable cause Miller committed a crime and set bond at $20,000.

Miller, who is single, has taught at UW-SP for 33 years after joining the faculty in 1965. He was teaching Math 111 and Math 213 this semester at the time of his arrest.

The university issued an official statement Wednesday.

"Professor Miller will not return to the classroom until this situation is resolved. He is currently on leave from his teaching duties. The university is cooperating with law enforcement in their ongoing investigation. We are considering our options in order to deal with this fairly and in a timely fashion," the statement said.

Police arrested Miller Monday after a complaint of suspicious activity in the YMCA boys locker room.

After being approached by police while leaving the building, Miller admitted he had

Supreme Court may hear Southworth case Students fight against funding special interest groups

By Jill Olson
NEWS REPORTER

Would you object to your student activity fee being used to fund student groups who speak out against your religious or personal beliefs? Five students from UW-Madison objected, and sued the UW-Board of Regents because of it.

Scott Southworth and four other students claimed that their First Amendment right of free speech is violated when they are forced, through the student activity fee, to fund student groups that they are ideologically or politically opposed to.

The groups that the students oppose speak out on such controversial issues as abortion, the death penalty, homosexuality and the United States' democratic process. Many of these student organizations in Madison are also active in lobbying.

When the case, Southworth vs. Grebe, went to court, the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals agreed with the district court ruling that said "forcing objecting students to fund private organizations which engage in political and ideological activities violates the First Amendment."

The Regents claimed that the First Amendment protects the rights of these organizations to engage in such speech. But the court acknowledged that the students were not trying to restrict speech of any group. They were only asking not to be forced to subsidize speech with which they disagree.

On November 6, the Board of Regents met and decided to appeal the case to the United States Supreme Court.

UW-SP Chancellor Thomas George attended the Board of Regents meeting in Madison.

"The Board of Regents made their decision based on what they thought was right for the University of

Vandalism hits Nelson Hall

The UW-Stevens Point Protective Services and the Stevens Point Police Department are currently investigating a break-in to Nelson Hall earlier this week that resulted in substantial damage to the hall.

According to Officer Jim West, the break-in occurred sometime between midnight on Monday and 6 a.m. on Tuesday. Protective Services received a call at 7:09 a.m. from a worker who located damage upon entering the hall.

When officers arrived, considerable damage to the hall was discovered. The east and northeast glass doors were broken, along with 10 other windows in the building.

Officers found damage to both personal and state property on all three levels of the hall. Blood was also found on all three levels of the building, leading officers to believe that the suspect suffered several injuries while in the hall.

No personal or state property was stolen in the break-in. Estimated damage to Nelson Hall has not yet been calculated.

Students get pointers on recycling

By Kyle Geltmeyer
NEWS EDITOR

UW-Stevens Point students learned about the importance of using recycled products and methods of composting as part of America Recycles and Use Less Stuff week.

On Tuesday night, UW-SP student and Stevens Point Area Co-op employee Matt Kauffman spoke to students in the College of Natural Resources about purchasing recycled products and environmental consumerism.

While Kauffman said that he did not advocate consumerism, he mentioned the importance of buying products that use minimal packaging.

"Watching what you buy and where you buy it is important," Kauffman said.

Kauffman said that recycling is important, but not enough.

"If you recycle something, great, but if you also buy recycled products, you help close the loop."

He recommended reusing grocery bags and purchasing food in bulk to help reduce packaging waste.

Kauffman also brought in some environmentally friendly products for the audience to look at. Although admitting that recycled products are usually more expensive, Kauffman said, "If you support environmentally safe products, you keep the demand up."

Kauffman also spoke of the importance of purchasing produce that doesn't contain extra packaging. He also recommended the practice of composting.

"A good portion of the food that is in the garbage is compostable."

On Wednesday, UW-SP Waste Reduction Management specialist Holly Johnson spoke in the University Center about composting including the use of worm composting.

"Composting is decomposition speeded up, leaving an end product like soil (which) is rich in organic material," Johnson said.

She added that composting is "taking a raw resource and recycling it into a valuable product."

According to Johnson, a study conducted in Madison found that the average person composted about 621 pounds per year in food scraps and yard materials. She also explained what items are and are not compostable, and showed different containers that can be used for composting.

Johnson then explained the process of worm composting. Worms are kept in a large, flat container with shredded paper as a bedding. Worms eat the food waste and excrete it into castings. The castings can be used as slow release nutrients for gardens.

"Gardeners are just starting to discover (worm composting) and a lot of research is being done," she said.

Thursday at 1 p.m. a waste-free lunch is scheduled in the U.C.

Miller admitted videotaping that night and also told police he had been taping since August of 1998, he said.

The duffel bag contained videotapes and a homemade camera mount so the lens pointed out of an opening, Eagon said. "Also in the duffel bag were notes with names and dates of birth."

A search of Miller's property indicated there were similar lists, according to the district attorney. Police also found equipment for transferring video images into a computer and equipment that copies disks, Eagon told the court.

Conditions of Miller's bond include no contact with the Stevens Point YMCA; no contact with children under 18; he cannot enter any elementary, junior high or high schools; he cannot possess any pornographic materials, any cameras or dangerous weapons; and he cannot share photos of children or adults that were taken without consent.

Formal charges must be filed by Tuesday at 1:30 p.m., when Miller's initial appearance is scheduled, Flugaur said.

Wisconsin students," said Chancellor George.

Of the 160 student organizations on the UW-SP campus, less than half are funded by the $115.90 student activity fee, which is divided many times before it is allocated to student groups by the Student Government Association (SGA).

UW-Stevens Point SGA President Michael Snyder says that Wisconsin is the only state university system that allows the student government complete control over which student organizations receive funding. But that may change if the case is heard by the Supreme Court.

"The Southworth case really challenges the right of students to organize through their student government and allocate funds to keep student life alive on campuses," says Snyder.

The student activity fee will remain the way it is until the Supreme Court hears the case.

"Of course there is no sense of what the schedule of all of this is going to be: how soon will the Supreme Court consider it, if they consider it at all?" Chancellor George said. "The only thing we know right now is for next semester, it will probably be business as usual."

Don't be too quick to judge this pair Understanding may be better than anger

Twice over the past week, a pair of individuals from the Stevens Point area have appeared in court to face criminal charges stemming from different incidents.

Last Wednesday, Jeffery Knick was arrested in the parking lot of Anchor Bank, located on Division Street, after allegedly pointing a gun at a bank employee.

While I would never say that I am a friend of Mr. Knick, we played on the same softball team this past summer, and I would say hello whenever I saw him at the local watering hole.

This man has always intrigued me. As a journalist, I've always enjoyed talking to people, because everyone has a story to their life. I was interested in Mr. Knick's story.

Probably a month ago, I was at Country Kitchen, when Knick came in. I saw him, and approached him with a friendly greeting.

He replied with a "Hello," and asked me to sit down at his table. I began talking to him and getting to know him. He told me of a recent trip out east to visit a relative at an armed forces base.

We talked for no more than five minutes, but in that short time, I learned more about this man than in the two years I have known of him.

Most importantly, I learned that Mr. Knick is not well. While I can't say for sure why, I, as well as many others can see this. Whether his problems stem from his trip to Vietnam during his service, or from other reasons, it would be an absolute crime for him to spend time in prison.

Jeff's punishment must be served in a place where professionals can monitor his state.

On Monday, Gordon Miller, a math professor here at UW-

Stevens Point, was arrested at the YMCA after allegedly videotaping boys in the facility's locker room.

Upon a search of Miller's property, District Attorney Thomas Eagon said the Stevens Point Police Department found numerous videotapes and video equipment.

In today's society, it would be very easy to assume both parties guilty. When an individual is caught in the act of breaking the law, innocence may be very hard to come by.

While I obviously do not condone their actions, I ask the court system, please, do not be quick to recommend prison as the best punishment for these two individuals. Their lives may have seen things that none of us can comprehend.

In the case of Jeff Knick, I hope for the best treatment of whatever demons may reside inside.

I extend the same hope to Professor Gordon Miller.

Secondhand smoke hurts everyone

Dear Editor:

Smoking continues to be a problem on our campus. Students are exposed to cigarette smoke when entering or existing buildings. Cigarette smoke contains 47 known carcinogens. While we cannot control people's right to smoke, we ought to be able to control our own exposure to that smoke. We think select doorways should be designated as smoking areas. Students would be able to control their exposure to secondhand smoke.

Computer labs are for work, not play

By Mike Kemmeter
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

I'll admit I don't spend a lot of time in the computer labs here on campus. Probably the only reason I do use them occasionally is because sometimes my classes meet in one of them.

But when I had to wait about 10 minutes Tuesday morning in the Collins Classroom Center, I figured I'd go and check my e-mail to kill some time.

Granted, it was about 9:30 in the morning and about five computers were open, but when I sat down in the back row, the guy next to me wasn't working on a paper, surfing the Internet or reading his e-mail. He was sitting there with headphones on playing a game. And it wasn't one of those silly e-mail games we all get from our friends. This was a full-blown role playing game.

I'm thinking playing games for hours isn't the university's idea of a computer lab, especially if people would be waiting for an open computer to do schoolwork.

That's exactly what happened to one of my friends recently. He was waiting, along with about five other students, to get on a computer to type a paper. Once he found a free computer, someone near him was doing the exact same thing -- playing games.

Information Technology recently extended Friday hours of the lab in the Learning Resource Center. Let's hope that added time is used for work and not play.

And then there was ice!

By Matt "Bert" Ward
OUTDOORS EDITOR

As you gaze out across a vast frozen wilderness with bone-chilling winter winds penetrating your clothing and snow hitting your face, it's difficult to realize that a peaceful, aquatic world exists just below the ice upon which you stand. Water is truly the most magnificent wonder that Mother Nature has created. It is a compound that contracts as it cools, and then magically expands as it reaches 39 degrees fahrenheit. This allows water to be less dense in its solid phase, causing it to float.

After turnover has ceased and mixing has resulted in lakes becoming uniformly 40 to 42 degrees fahrenheit, ice formation begins taking place. This is a process dependent upon air temperatures, depth, exposure to wind and the angle and amount of sunlight the lake receives. The lakes surface water will continue cooling until it reaches 39 degrees fahrenheit, the temperature at which water is the most dense. The colder, denser water molecules will descend to the bottom of the lake and will stay 39 degrees fahrenheit until spring.

The surface temperatures of the lake will continue to drop until they reach 32 degrees Fahrenheit, when ice forms. Formation begins on cold, still nights when water undergoes a crystallization process that causes it to expand by 10 percent. This allows the ice to easily float above the colder, denser water that lies directly below it. When descending down the water column, temperatures will increase proportionally from 32 to 39 degrees fahrenheit.

The water then undergoes several subtle changes. Water clarity increases, and the light penetration and oxygen levels decrease. The most prevalent change is the gradual depletion of oxygen. Oxygen that is consumed by the fish in their daily activities during the open water period is replenished by tributary streams, water molecules coming in contact with air molecules and the photosynthesis of plants.

With the formation of ice, water molecules no longer come in contact with air molecules, tributary streams become less significant and photosynthesis slows down considerably. Fish can then face oxygen deprivation, which has the potential to lead to winter-kill. Winter-kills generally occur on lakes less than 20 feet deep, with no tributary streams, covered by a deep snowfall which blocks the sun's rays and causes photosynthesis to cease completely. Unfortunately, oxygen deprivation affects the largest fish in the lake most severely, and consequently smaller, shallower lakes lack larger fish for this reason.

Water clarity improves greatly because the bottom is no longer being stirred up by the action of the waves and wind and most suspended sediments tend to settle to the bottom. Light penetration diminishes due to the increasing thickness of the ice and the heavy snowfall. So as you stand in quiet solitude and let the crisp winter air fill your lungs, drill a window to what lies below and view the aquatic world the ice decided to hide.

Saturday brings deer gun opener

By Joe Shead
ASSISTANT OUTDOORS EDITOR

This weekend, thousands of hunters will take to the woods and fields across Wisconsin to renew one of the strongest traditions in the state.

Brothers and cousins, sons and dads, not to mention a few mothers and daughters will take part in the silent, lonely sits on stand and the warm camaraderie of hunting stories told around a fire while enjoying fresh venison.

Hunters will pursue the state's estimated 1.25 million deer. This season's harvest should be similar to last season's harvest of 292,513 deer.

Though not as high as the record harvests of the early 1990s, it's still a hefty amount of deer. Population levels are now lower than earlier in this decade as the herd population has come closer to the management goals.

Populations were so high the past two years that the DNR had to open a special Zone T hunt in several Deer Management Units (DMUS) across the state. The success of these hunts at controlling population levels is apparent since this special season was only opened in one DMU this year.

The severity of last winter was one of the lowest on record, resulting in very little mortality. In effect, there should be an abundance of deer this season. As a result, the DNR made 40,000 antlerless permits available to try to curtail the herd size.

Season outlook varies by location. Hunters in the north should see more deer than last year because of the mild winter. Populations are generally at or slightly above their respective goal levels. Since fewer people hunt this region, there should be a better chance of drawing one of the relatively few antlerless deer permits. Also, this may be the best place in the state for big bucks since less hunting pressure in the area means more deer will survive to grow larger antlers.

Agricultural regions of central Wisconsin as usual have high deer populations. The only Zone T hunt was held in this region, attesting to the high number of deer present here. But where there are deer, there are hunters. This region also has one of the highest hunter densities in the state. Although high numbers of deer may mean success for the hunter looking for venison, people searching for big bucks may have to do so a little harder than other areas of the state.

Deer populations in both the west-central and south-eastern parts of the state should be similar to last year while hunters in the south-central part of the state may find populations slightly lower than last year.

No matter where you go or what type of hunting you intend to do, there's a place in Wisconsin to fit your niche and hopefully put some venison in the freezer.

Preserving the pieces of our past

By Lisa Rothe
OUTDOORS REPORTER

Normally I'd spend a cold, gray Saturday in bed with a good book. But this last weekend, instead of losing myself in Dickens, a friend and I fell in love with Wisconsin's rich history. Schmeckle Reserve's Barns of Wisconsin presentation drowned out our laziness for the afternoon.

When the German, Dutch, Irish, Polish and Scandinavian immigrants settled in Wisconsin after it became a state in 1848, virgin pine and hardwood forests greeted them. Realizing the economic benefits of harvesting timber, the lumber industry flourished.

After the land was cleared of stumps, the immigrants started farming for grains. However, by 1890, dairy farming dominated the agricultural industry. Barns dotted the landscape as the hardwoods and pines once had. According to a booklet published by the Marathon County Historical Society and the Marathon County Sesquicentennial Society entitled Discover Marathon County's Agricultural Heritage, preservation of these barns is a key to remembering the past.

"The barns and silos of Marathon County are a reflection of both the importance of dairy farming in the area since the 1890s and the ethnic heritage of the county's farmers." Driving home this Thanksgiving, I challenge you to find the farms that you normally overlook. Seeing the decrepit or beautifully kept barns will hopefully provoke you to wonder about the trials and tribulations faced every day by immigrant farmers.

Often times barns are red. Why is it that most every barn that we see isn't painted a different color? Ferrous oxide, or rust, is the main component of red paint. Because it was inexpensive, farmers attempting to cut corners used the readily available, now traditional, red paint for their barns.

The earliest barns in the county, built by the German immigrants, were log barns built quickly and cheaply. Like the log barns, the Germans introduced half-timber barns. These were constructed without nails using wooden tenons and mortises. The Poles arrived soon after the Germans and adopted their architectural expertise.

Other types of barns, such as three-bay, bank, forebay and two-story, were and still are used for different purposes in Wisconsin. However, the presentation centered more on roof types than the architecture of barns. Gable, arched/round, and the English and Dutch gambrel are roof styles most likely recognized by everyone.

I encourage you to go to the library and find a history book. Looking at barns will never be the same again. Large parts of our community were built by the hands of diligent, dedicated farmers whose barns may still stand as a testimony of time and hard work.

Wisconsin to be studied for reintroduction of whooping cranes

Breeding range of cranes to be reestablished from central Canada to southern Mexico

Whooping cranes may be reintroduced in Wisconsin if a federal assessment finds that the state has sufficient habitat to support a breeding population of these endangered birds, state and federal officials announced.

The whooping crane is making a steady recovery thanks to the efforts of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS), the Canadian Wildlife Service, and the International Crane Foundation (ICF).

Pushed to the brink of extinction in the early 1900s, when there were just 15 birds in the entire world, there are now 265 whooping cranes in the wild and 132 in captivity in North America.

The decision to proceed with studying Wisconsin for reintroduction was made Nov. 10 in Madison at a joint meeting of the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources and USFWS. The Natural Resources Foundation of Wisconsin was also represented at the meeting.

"Historically, Wisconsin was part of the whooping crane's breeding range, which once extended from central Canada south to Mexico, and from Utah to the Atlantic coast," said Sumner Matteson, DNR avian ecologist.

"Factors that contributed to the decline of this shy, secretive bird included disturbance and development of wetland breeding habitats by an expanding human population, specimen and egg collecting, and hunting."

Whooping cranes are large, white birds with wingspans of seven to eight feet. Their wingtips, legs, and feet are black; they have black facial markings, and they have a bare patch of red skin on their heads. Chicks also have black wingtips, but their body feathers are tawny brown and white.

There is currently only one wild, productive, migratory population in North America. This population breeds in Wood Buffalo National Park in Alberta and the Northwest Territories, Canada, and migrates to the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge near Rockport, Texas.

"Federal recovery plans call for establishing two self-sustaining migratory populations in addition to the Wood Buffalo population," Matteson explained. "It is hoped that the first of these will be a non-migratory population currently being established in the Kissimmee Prairie region of Florida. The second would be another migratory population, and this is where Wisconsin now enters the picture."

"This past August, the federal whooping crane recovery team recommended that a new introduced population be established well east of the Wood Buffalo/Aransas population to minimize mixing of the two populations. The outcome of today's meeting may be the first step in restoring whooping cranes to the state."

The last wild whooping crane in Wisconsin was shot in 1878 in Green County. We may have a chance, similar to recent successes with the trumpeter swan, to see another special part of our natural heritage restored.

whooping crane reintroduction.

"In addition to collecting biological information on habitat suitability, we will be collecting information pertaining to the social aspects of this effort such as peoples' concerns about the impacts on hunting, use of marshlands, and potential for crop damage."

Once the habitat feasibility study is completed and a determination is made that Wisconsin has sufficient habitat to maintain a whooping crane population, the DNR will decide whether or not to proceed with reintroduction efforts.

If the decision is "yes," a federal environmental assessment will be developed for public comment before the final USFWS decision is made.

"There is little question that whooping cranes in Wisconsin would provide a tremendous boost to bird-watching activities in the state," Miller said. "The associated economic impacts would be a significant addition to the already six billion dollar fish and wildlife-based industry in the state."

Environmental Ed. Board offers grant

The Wisconsin Environmental Education Board (WEEB), located at the UW-Stevens Point, is seeking proposals for the 1999-2000 grant cycle. Public and private educational institutions, all units of government and nonprofit and nonstock corporations are eligible for WEEB grants.

Requests cannot exceed $20,000. Submitted proposals will be evaluated in two categories: general environmental education and forestry education.

Projects must be designed for Wisconsin residents and assist learners in achieving the goals of environmental education.

Initiated in 1990, WEEB's mission is to "provide leadership in the development of lending opportunities that empower Wisconsin citizens with the knowledge and skills needed to make wise environmental decisions and take responsible actions in their personal lives, work places and communities."

This year, with the addition of $200,000 from the Wisconsin Conservation Fund, the board will be able to fund more education programs than ever before. In addition, the board will award $200,000 from State General Program Revenue Funds and approximately $30,000 from funds obtained via a surcharge on environmental fines.

To date, the board has received over 1,000 proposals totaling nearly 10 million dollars. This year's application deadline is Jan. 15, 1999. For an application or more information on WEEB's environmental education grant program, contact Administrative Specialist Ginny Carlton at (715)346-3805 or email weeb@uwsp.edu.

Council passes special bow hunt

By Mike Kemmeter
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

For the second consecutive year, city of Stevens Point residents can bow hunt in a section of the 10th ward, but there could be a new wrinkle.

The Stevens Point Common Council unanimously approved the limited hunt on city land behind the city Sewage Treatment Plant. However, if state law permits, hunters can only pull back their bows on a doe.

The city's Public Works Committee had recommended last week for the hunt to be for bucks.

Alderman Joe Niedbalski said the best way to lower a population is to hunt bucks and not does.

"You don't do it by thinning the does."

The hunting area stretches along the Wisconsin River south to Howard Avenue. The area extends as far east as Whiting Avenue with the western boarder 150 feet east of the Green Circle Trail.

Baiting and driving deer will not be allowed and hunting is only opened to city-owned land. Parking is also restricted to a section of Whiting Avenue and a portion of Mason Street.

Last year seven deer were killed during the late hunt, said Jon VanAlstine, Director of Public Works.

Hunting permits will be issued on a lottery basis. Applicants must register in person at the Stevens Point Engineering Department in County-City Building, 1515 Strongs Ave. The deadline for applications is Wednesday, Nov. 25 at 10 p.m.

Thoughts from the Dawg House...

High school football is alive and well

By Nick Brilowski
SPORTS EDITOR

When I picked up last week's copy of Sports Illustrated and looked at the cover, something I saw immediately caught my eye. No, it wasn't Texas running back Ricky Williams, but rather a special report titled "Is High School Football Dying?"

With interest, I read the article and was deeply bothered. The story mentioned how 38 states in the U.S. have noticed a substantial decline in participation in the 1990s. Happily, one of the states that hasn't suffered a decline in interest is Wisconsin.

Last weekend, I had the opportunity to see up close why football is alive and kicking in our state.

Friday night, I trekked over to Goerke Field to watch the WIAA Division 1 state semifinal showdown between D.C. Everest and Wisconsin Rapids.

Being from Stevens Point and having played high school football at Goerke, I was absolutely amazed at the crowd on hand. The bleachers on both sides of the field were filled to capacity and people lined three-deep around the track surrounding the field.

They weren't disappointed as the two teams, who had battled to a 70-63 shootout (won by Everest) during the regular season, went the entire 48 minutes in a game won again by D.C.E., 24-21. It was truly one of the greatest games I have ever seen.

As great as the game Friday night was, it was the game the following morning that I had been anticipating for over three months.

For the past three seasons, I have been fortunate enough to be an assistant coach at my alma mater, Pacelli High here in Point.

Just a few days before preseason practices got underway, I took on the position of being the team's offensive coordinator. It's been quite a hectic semester for a 20-year old sports editor, employee of Dave Koch Sports, assistant football coach and full-time student.

The experience has been something I wouldn't trade for anything in the world, though. Someone who has never been involved in high school football cannot understand the lessons that the sport teaches. Determination, desire, dedication, hard work and teamwork are just a few of the life lessons involved.

Despite returning a solid senior class, not too many people probably believed that a team that was 5-5 last season would be able to make it back to the WISAA Division 3 State Championship game for the third time in four years.

Even though Manitowoc Roncalli spoiled our party at Camp Randall Stadium in Madison by winning their third consecutive state title, our 10-2 record is something we could take pride in. It was an experience they'll never forget and a goal they achieved.

Thank you, guys. Even though I'll probably go grey by the time I'm 25, you've given me memories that I'll carry with me for the rest of my life.

Football handles Southwest in finale

Despite strong finish, team is denied NCAA berth

By Nick Brilowski
SPORTS EDITOR

The UW-Stevens Point football team probably knew going into their game with Southwest State Saturday afternoon at the Metrodome that despite entering with a 6-2 record, their possibilities of making the playoffs were slim.

That didn't stop the Pointers from making an impression nonetheless. UW-SP used a career day from receiver Andy Martin to handle the Mustangs, 28-16.

Martin, playing in his final game as a Pointer, hauled in 10 passes from Ryan Aulenbacher for a whopping 232 yards.

The receiving yardage total ranks as tie for fourth in Pointer history. Chuck Braun holds the record with 303 yards, set in 1981.

Four-time All-Conference line-backer Clint Kriewaldt got Point on the board first with a five-yard scoring run just 3:24 into the game. Jason Steuck's point after gave UW-SP the 7-0 lead.

The play was set up by Mustang punter Nathan Krull dropping to a knee to field a low snap, giving the Pointers the ball at the Southwest 21.

Martin struck for his first big play of the game midway through the first when he hauled in a 48-yard pass from Aulenbacher to stretch the Pointer lead to two touchdowns.

Kriewaldt struck again on a four-yard run on fourth down to expand the lead before Southwest

State got on the board thanks to a 28-yard pass from Steve Yakesh

Hockey splits a pair with Foresters

By Jesse Osborne
SPORTS REPORTER

The UW-Stevens Point men's hockey team split a pair of games in a two game homestand last weekend against Lake Forest College, falling on Friday 4-3, and winning a 4-3 decision Saturday afternoon.

On Friday night, the Foresters struck first on a James Austin power-play goal at the 4:29 mark.

The Pointers countered as Ryan Maxson scored from near center ice as Forester goaltender Aaron Vicker somehow let the puck trickle by him.

Ben Gorewich then picked up a power-play goal with an assist from Duncan Cook to go into the first intermission leading 2-1.

The Foresters then got back into the game in the second as Doug Fur scored on the power-play to tie the game at 2-2.

In the third, Lake Forest jumped on top with another goal, but the Pointers once again bounced back thanks to another power-play goal by Gorewich.

The Foresters, however picked up a power-play with under a minute left and capitalized as Mark Falconi scored with just 12 seconds left to ensure a Forester win.

Pointer women begin with high hopes

By Michelle Tesmer
SPORTS REPORTER

The 1998-1999 UW-Stevens Point women's basketball season has all the makings of a great one.

The Pointers open the year ranked 19th in the nation in Dick Vitale's College Basketball Preview. Last year's WIAC leading scorer, Jessica Ott, returns as a junior this year having been named to Vitale's preseason first team All-American squad.

Ott's leadership both on and off the court will be vital since there are eight freshmen on the team. The starting lineup will feature Ott as the only junior along with two sophomores and two freshmen.

Head coach Shirley Egner was a little uncertain of the 19th ranking, but happy that Ott is being recognized for her skills.

"I'm not sure where they got (the ranking). I'm sure a lot of that is because of Jessica Ott," Egner said. "She's very deserving of the ranking. We'll all follow Jes' lead.

"She's worked at stepping up her defense along with being a great offensive player."

Playing in the toughest Division III conference in the country doesn't intimidate the team either.

"We want to challenge for the conference championship. We want to finish one or two," Egner said. "We are very young with two freshmen that will start. We have a lot of growing to do, which comes from playing."

Egner expects Oshkosh and Eau Claire to be top contenders in the WIAC along with Stout, River Falls and the Pointers.

There is also a new look for the end of the season. This is the first year that there will be a post-season tournament.

"It's great," Egner said. "It gives the kids another opportunity to fight. All nine schools have a shot at the top dogs."

The Pointers kick off their season this Friday in the Terry Porter Classic against Ripon College at 5 p.m.

Hoerman to be honored in pregame ceremony Friday Open Classic against Upper Iowa

By Jessica Burda
SPORTS EDITOR

An emotional season kickoff awaits the UW-Stevens Point men's basketball team, as they say hello to another season of hoops and goodbye to a close friend and teammate.

The Pointers start the basketball year with the 15th Annual Terry Porter Classic Friday at Quandt Fieldhouse. Point tips off the Classic with a game against the visiting Upper Iowa University Peacocks. But before the much anticipated action begins, the Pointers must first provide some closure for themselves and their fans.

Friday night before tip-off at 7 p.m., the UW-SP team will hold a ceremony in honor of teammate Kurt Hoerman, who died tragically in a car accident this summer.

"You'll always deal with negative things," head coach Jack Bennett said. "But this really brought us to our knees as a team. Our greatest tribute is to play hard like Kurt always did."

During the pre-game ceremony, the team plans to present Hoerman's parents with a framed game jersey of their late teammate. Additionally, the Pointers will leave an open space for him on the Point bench and his locker empty throughout the rest of the year. All of Hoerman's teammates will be wearing armbands with his initials and number and marking their game shoes as well.

"It's going to be an emotional event," Bennett said, "it will put some closure from a team standpoint."

Hoerman played point guard in his three years with the team, spending one year as a redshirt freshman.

"In the next two years, his role would have been even greater," Bennett said. "We trust he'll be with the team in spirit. We'll carry his memory with us."

As they begin their season, the Pointers are looking beyond the past months and ahead to this weekend's Classic.

"We don't know a whole lot about (Upper Iowa)," Bennett said. "They're very athletic, very quick and we'll have to match up."

A win against Upper Iowa ensures UW-SP a championship berth against either Viterbo College or Carroll College.

The Terry Porter Classic leads the Pointers almost straight into their WIAC competition, with one stop over at Winona State Nov. 24, before the Dogs face UW-Whitewater Dec. 2.

"This tournament will test out our depth and our basic chemistry," Bennett said. "It's going to be a very good tournament."

CC men head to nationals Women finish seventh in regional

By Mike Kemmeter
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Revenge is sweet, but the UW-Stevens Point men's cross country team still has a lot more work to do.

The Pointers qualified for the NCAA Division III National Championships by finishing second with 85 points at the Midwest Regional in St. Louis. And in the process of qualifying for nationals, UW-SP also beat arch-rival UW-La Crosse, the team that ended Point's quest for a three-peat at the WIAC Championships two weeks ago.

"I felt like we improved over where we had been two weeks ago," UW-SP men's coach Rick Witt said. "The front guys ran better. We're still struggling with our fifth guy, we have to close the gap a little."

Jesse Drake paced the Pointers with a fifth place finish, covering the 8,000 meter course in 24:55. Dan Schwamberger wasn't far behind (7th in 24:59), while Ryan Wenos (12th in 25:07), Matt Hayes (18th in 25:17) and Shane Suebring (43rd in 25:57) rounded out the top five.

While the men's season concludes Saturday in Carlisle, Penn., the women's season came to an end at regionals.

The Pointers finished seventh with 179 points. The top four teams, including UW-Oshkosh and UW-La Crosse, qualified for nationals.

Leah Juno led the Pointers and finished the 5,000 meter course in 18:05. Lisa Pisca (21st in 18:23), Sara Holewinski (32nd in 18:36), Alyssa Garbe (49th in 18:59) and Maggie Dennewitz (64th in 19:16) completed the scoring for UW-SP.

According to Witt, the Pointer men should challenge for the top four spots, which would bring some hardware back to campus.

"I think realistically, if we run well, we can get a trophy. At the beginning of the season, after we lost a lot to graduation, I thought I'd be happy with the top 10," Witt said.

Defending National Champion North Central College (Ill.) is the favorite to repeat after they won the Midwest Regional with 61 points.

"They'd have to not run well for somebody to beat them. They're that good," Witt said. "It's not beyond the realm of possibility (to beat North Central), but being in the top four is realistic."

Wrestlers host Golden Eagle Open

By Mike Beacom
MANAGING EDITOR

The UW-Stevens Point wrestling team welcomed wrestlers from all over the midwest for The Golden Eagle Open last Saturday in the Health Enhancement Center.

Point received a top four placing from Ross Buchinger (3rd at 149 pounds) and 197 pounder Ben Kurek (4th).

Buchinger, who along with Kurek is 2-0 in dual action this year, suffered a 3-2 third round defeat to Lucas Dyer of Northern Illinois before regrouping in the B-bracket. The senior took the next three matches and concluded his day with a 2-1 third place match.

Kurek, a junior, dominated his first two matches before falling 5-2 to conference opponent Wes Folk of Platteville 5-2. Kurek went 1-1 from there out finish up the day.

In the tournament's Silver Division, Pointer true freshmen Mark McCartney and Nick Langer were the runner-up in their respective weight classes.

McCartney lost 2-1 in the 125 pound finals, while Langer lost 6-3 at 184.

Point heads to Nebraska this weekend for another open tournament.

The Pointers next home match will be a Dec. 9 dual against UW-Platteville.

Club spikers open season

With a several weeks of practice behind them, the UW-Stevens Point men's volleyball team prepares for their upcoming season of sets, spikes and kills.

Hoping to turn around their game after last year's disappointing season, club President Matthew Kalisiak believes UW-SP has the experience and depth for success this year.

"We're returning five starters," Kalisiak said, "and we have a lot of athletic freshmen. It's still another rebuilding year, but we'll do better than last year."

Serving up their first conference action against Carroll College Dec. 5th, UW-SP begins competition against a strong league of club volleyball teams in Wisconsin.

In their conference division, Point competes with Marquette University, Lakeland College, and Carroll College. Adding to the challenge, UW schools Oshkosh, La Crosse, Milwaukee, Whitewater, Platteville and Madison finish off the division.

With the entire conference season ahead of them, Kalisiak and his teammates focus on what they need to accomplish.

"Our goals are to improve over last year," Kalisiak said, "have some players earn all-conference and go to nationals."

Hockey:Foresters steal game one

"You can't give a team with a good goaltender too many opportunities on the power-play, or you get burned, and that's what happened," UW-SP coach Joe Baldarotta said.

In a rare Saturday afternoon game, Point came out strong.

Mike Slobodnik opened the scoring for the Pointers as he tallied from point blank range before Maxson picked up an unassisted goal for a 2-0 advantage.

Lake Forest came alive in the second as Austin scored on the powerplay, and Jon Marks picked up a shorthanded goal to knot the game at 2-2.

Brown countered for the Pointers as he ripped home a slapshot for a 3-2 UW-SP lead.

In the third, Norm Campbell picked up his second goal of the season with Maxson assisting to extend the Pointer lead to 4-2.

The Foresters picked up a goal late, but it wasn't enough as the UW-SP came away with a 4-3 win.

Dave Cinelli earned the first victory of his Pointer career as he made 18 saves.

The win leaves UW-SP with a 4-3-0 record as they are on the road this weekend, traveling to Hamline University on Friday, and to Augsburg College on Saturday.

to Dan McGee.

Martin and Aulenbacher hooked up again with 4:09 remaining in the second, this time on a 44-yard score to give Point a 28-7 lead going into the half.

The Mustangs cut into the Pointer lead in the second half on a 35-yard field goal by Krull and a 18-yard touchdown pass from Yakesh to Jon Howard to account for the final margin.

As has been the case all season long, the UW-SP defense rose to the occasion, sacking Yakesh seven times while forcing Southwest State to minus-27 yards rushing.

Despite finishing with a five-game winning streak, a 7-2 overall mark and a share of the WIAC championship, the Pointers were denied an invitation to the NCAA Division III Tournament.

UW-Eau Claire, who the Pointers defeated earlier in the season, 27-26, was the only WIAC team to earn an invitation.

SNOW AND ICE REMOVAL

According to an ordinance of the City, all sidewalks must be cleared of snow and ice, the entire width of the sidewalk, within twenty-four (24) hours after snow ceases to fall, except on those streets or portions thereof where no boulevard is located, in which case snow shall be removed within 48 hours. If such is not done, the City shall cause such snow to be removed or ice sanded and the cost shall be billed to the property owner. If not paid sooner, the cost shall be placed upon the next tax statement of the property owner.

LOWERING YOUR BLOOD CHOLESTEROL

From the UW-SP
Lifestyle Assistance Office

With all of the nutrition hype, it's hard to discern what information is helpful and what is not. Blood cholesterol has been in the news, and maintaining a desirable blood cholesterol level reduces the risk for coronary heart disease. Cholesterol is a fatty substance that can be found in the foods we eat as well as in the blood.

Cholesterol is necessary in the body for nerves, cell membranes, bile production (a substance that helps digest fat) and sex hormones. Our body manufactures 80 percent of the cholesterol that is needed, so we don't need to eat a lot of added cholesterol in our diet. Research suggests that high blood cholesterol can be attributed to high intake of saturated fats, lack of exercise, stress, genetic predisposition, smoking and being overweight.

Cholesterol is transported throughout the body in the form of lipoproteins. Low-density lipoproteins (LDL) collect along the arterial walls where plaque develops, which can lead to atherosclerosis. High Density Lipoproteins, (HDL) "the good kind," pass through the liver and take cholesterol out of the body.

Here are some tips to remember when choosing foods which contribute to lower blood cholesterol.

- Read foods labels and buy products with the least amount of saturated fats.
- Select lean meats, fish and poultry
- Choose low fat dairy products such as skim milk, low fat cottage cheese and reduced fat cheeses.
- Increase intake of water-soluble fibers. This includes dry beans, peas, tofu and oat products.
- Eat more fruits and vegetables.
- Choose breads and cereals that contain fiber and whole grains.

Cholesterol in your diet is not a bad thing. However, it does need to be monitored to make sure it is at a desirable level. If you are interested in having your cholesterol checked, call the Health Center at X4646 to make an appointment.

Tae Kwon Do club kicks at state

By Amy Mason
FEATURES REPORTER

Several UW-Stevens Point Tae Kwon Do Club (TKD) members kicked their way to a first place finish at the 18th annual Tae Kwon Do State Championship on November 7. The event was held at the Lombardi Middle School in Green Bay.

According to Rocky Lange, the UW-SP TKD club president, the purpose of the competition was to rank the best TKD black belts in the state for qualification in the national competition sponsored by the U.S. Tae Kwon Do Union (USTU).

Peter Shave, a sophomore, said that TKD events are divided up almost the same as in boxing.

Lange received third place in the heavyweight category for sparring while Shave took first place in First Degree heavyweight forms and lightweight sparring. Nicole Groshek, a freshman, received first in First Degree light/heavyweight forms and welterweight sparring.

Rebecca Hanson brought home a first place finish in creative breaking and a third in First Degree heavyweight forms and middleweight sparring.

Lee Steigerwaldt received second place for her efforts in creative breaking, First Dan light/heavyweight forms and welterweight sparring.

Carol Landrath was victorious with two first place wins in Third Degree forms and golden senior sparring.

Josh Eastman and Nathan Sockrider competed in the Open Tournament for colored belts. Eastman competed in the white/yellow belt division and placed first in forms and sparring and took second place in breaking.

Sockrider brought home a second place finish in the blue/green belt sparring and two third place wins in forms and breaking.

Lacey Groshek, a SPASH high school student, received first place in middleweight sparring and a second in First Degree heavyweight forms.

Lange said the club isn't just for UW-SP students.

There is a mutual respect for each other."
-Dwight Stevens

"The club is for anyone who wants to join," said Lange. "You don't have to be a certain age, and you don't have to be a student at UW-SP. We have SPASH students who are members."

Lange also mentioned he was pleased with the performance of everyone in the club. "Everyone did really well," said Lange. "We are looking forward to the National Competition."

TKD Nationals will be held in April. Although the competition is five months away, Lange said the key to staying in shape is practice.

Tastes of the Towne: Arbuckles Eatery

By Ethan Meyer
RESTAURANT CRITIC

Tucked away on Strongs Ave. in bustling downtown Stevens Point, one may find the popular Italian style eatery called Arbuckles. Offering a multitude of choices ranging from pizza and pasta to steaks and sandwiches, Arbuckles is suitable for most any informal outing.

The first time that I visited Arbuckles, I left disappointed. This was the result of terrible service. I had ordered the Chicken Parmesan; after about 20 minutes, my waitress informed me that she had forgotten to give me my salad and that it would be served with my entree.

At this point, I had drawn two conclusions. Firstly, whoever was cooking was not on the ball. Secondly, my waitress was not paying much attention to my table.

Being the slave to tradition and training that I am, I could do nothing but angrily munch at my salad as I watched my pasta grow colder with every second. The pasta was about room temperature by the time I got around to it, but still tasted decent.

My second trip was considerably more pleasant. The service was fairly good, although I only ordered the Italian Cheese fries for fear that multiple courses would slow my plans for the remainder of the evening.

The cheese fries are great if you are into that sort of thing, although more choices of sauces may be in order.

One thing that I really enjoyed about the atmosphere at Arbuckles was the complete separation between the smoking and non-smoking sections.

All in all, I can't say that I will not return to Arbuckles. I take into account that sometimes accidents happen, but I will still be leery of them in the future.

“Experience the Colors” with Xiong

Hmong cultural consultant, comedian, storyteller, rap artist and actor Tou Ger Xiong will perform at UW-Stevens Point on Tuesday, Nov. 24.

The performance will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Melvin Laird Room in the University Center and will include pumpkin treats and beverages.

The event is the second of five in the “Experience the Colors—a cultural event” series sponsored by UW-SP’s Office of Multicultural Affairs.

Xiong’s “Project Respectism” is an educational program that uses comedy, storytelling and rap music to bridge cultures and generations.

He has shared his experiences with racism and growing up within both Hmong and American cultures with audiences of all ages in over 18 states over the past four years.

“Right now is our time in history to go through acculturation,” said Xiong, “letting go of some things and holding on to others.”

Xiong’s goals are to install pride of heritage in Hmong youth and to bring about greater intercultural understanding.

Tou has been featured on national television and radio and is referred to as the first Hmong comedian, bilingual storyteller and consultant on multicultural issues. Young people have referred to him as the Hmong version of Eddie Murphy, Jim Carrey and Snoop Doggy Dogg.

The “Experience the Colors” series intends to expose students to various cultures that represent the main ethnic groups the office serves. Native American, African American, South Asian, Southeast Asian and Hispanic performers will appear throughout the year.

Tickets for the event are $3 for the public and $2 for students.

FEATURE ESSAY

The dangers of drinking and driving

By Cheryl Riehle

FEATURED COLUMNIST

Have you ever thought about what you would do if you found out your mom and/or dad were injured in a car accident? Or even worse, killed?

Recently a friend of mine had to deal with that reality. To the surprise of many, the cause of this traumatic incident was that of a drunk driver.

About two weeks ago her parents were driving home on the highway, when out of nowhere a drunk driver slammed into them. He took the life of her mother and put her dad in the hospital in critical condition. The driver is still alive.

I just need to ask all of you out there that drink and drive — Why? Do you ever think of the consequences that could occur on behalf of your actions?

Nothing should be so important that you would risk your own life. There will always be more alcohol and parties, but there will only be one of you. “When you’re drinking, you’re just out having a good time. You think you’re fine to drive or your friend that only had a few sips is. You never think about all the consequences that could occur,” Brooklynn Strong said about her reaction to drinking and driving.

Is that all worth it? I don’t think so. If you’re reading this and you just think ‘yeah, yeah, I’ve heard this lecture many times before,’ then why don’t you wise up. Get a ride from someone who hasn’t been drinking. Please don’t take my life, my mom’s life or your own life. It’s not worth it.

Washington sharp in action flick Siege

By Nick Katzmarek
FILM CRITIC

One of the best things you can do to ensure that you'll enjoy a movie is to go into it thinking that you'll hate it.

This was basically my feeling when I sat down to watch The Siege. I'm not a huge Denzel Washington or Bruce Willis fan, so my expectations were a little low on this one.

However, I left the theatre satisfied that my time had not been wasted. While Willis' mug appears every five seconds during the trailer, he has a smallish part in the movie, and I was pleasantly surprised at Washington's ability to keep me interested.

The other nice surprise was seeing that Annette Bening had such a large role as a CIA agent working with Washington (who plays an FBI agent). She is an impressive actress and her presence is good for the film.

Another pleasant surprise was seeing Tony Shalhoub (TV's Wings) in a feature production. He impresses me, and he worked well with Washington.

The film centers around terrorist activity in New York by cells of Arabs. And while the subject could have been touchy, director Ed Zwick makes the real heart of the film the atrocities that the terrorists (and Americans) suffer at the hands of martial law in New York.

The action fan is kept in the film with explosions and sex, but these factors are relegated to the background while Zwick chooses to explore more character issues and relation issues with Arabs and Americans.

All in all a good film. It won't go down as a classic or probably garner any nominations, but if you look at the playlists at theatres, this on is probably your best bet.

Bonnie and Clyde
(1967, 111 min)

One of the greatest gangster films of all-time, Arthur Penn's Bonnie and Clyde helped introduce blood and guts violence to the big screen.

The story follows bank robbers Bonnie Parker (played by Faye Dunaway) and Clyde Barrow (Warren Beatty) as they drive around the country spitting in the face of law enforcement everywhere.

They join their friends along the way (Gene Hackman, Estelle Parsons and Michael J. Parsons) and play peek-a-boo with the police until they're moved down by a sky full of machine gun fire.

Penn's direction in Bonnie and Clyde is fantastic and was an influence for other great directors like Francis Ford Coppola who basically copied the film's ending scene in his masterpiece The Godfather.

Bonnie and Clyde is a classic one cannot miss viewing.

Great covers on Garage

Metallica
"Garage Inc."

By Steve Schoemer
MUSIC CRITIC

Who knew? Apparently everybody but me. Metallica just released their newest album "Garage Inc." The album is a double disc set, 27 songs, that are all cover tunes.

The first disc contains 11 brand new covers for the band. The second disc contains all of their old covers that oldschool Metallica fans have always loved.

Just a few of the new songs recorded are "Sabba Cadabra" by Black Sabbath, a "metaled" up and recently released video "Turn the Page" by Bob Seger, and an unexpected rendition of Lynyrd Skynyrd's "Tuesday's Gone." On this track they have other musicians sitting in such as Jerry Cantrell of Alice in Chains, and John Popper of Blues Traveler.

Disc two contains the very first two cover songs Metallica ever recorded, "Garage Days Re-Revisited," several of their favorite B-sides and one-offs, and finally a four block shot of Motorhead.

I have heard time and time again that Metallica has become just another sell-out band that instead of playing what they feel, they play music that will make it on the radio.

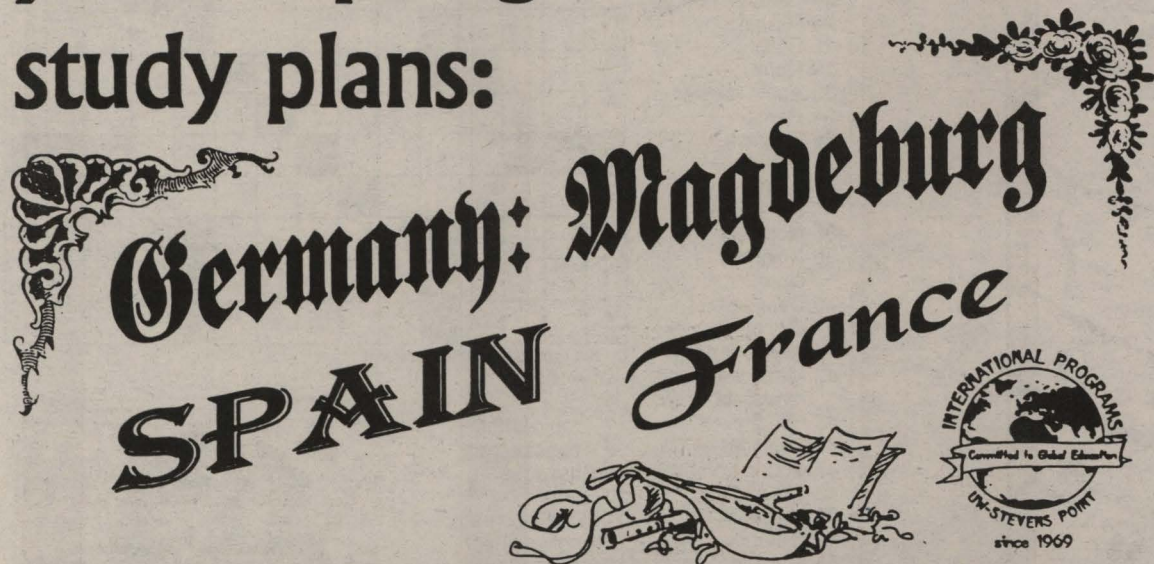

I bought in to these accusations at first. Then I gave their new music a chance, and it is actually quite superior (musically speaking).

The only problem I have with it is that it isn't the raw, fuel injected sound I associate with Metallica.

This new album is loaded with adrenaline. And the great thing about Metallica doing a cover album is that even they are not their own songs, they take the songs and play them as if they were. This album is worth checking out.

way away, but we will be ready for Nationals," said Lange.

Lange also said the UW-SP TKD Club is the only free martial arts club in Stevens Point. Not only can you join the club, but if you're looking for an alternative to traditional classes, you can also take Tae Kwon Do as a one-credit class.

Dwight Stevens, a UW-SP TKD instructor, said that Tae Kwon Do is known primarily as a kicking art.

Stevens said that TKD is similar to karate, another martial arts sport, in that both focus on sparring and kicking. The difference is that TKD is more mobile and more akin to self-defense. TKD differs from karate in that it is recognized as a full-medal sport in the Olympics.

He also said the history of Tae Kwon Do in the United States actually goes back to Korea. American soldiers learned about TKD while they were stationed there for the Korean War. The soldiers brought the sport back to the United States.

Stevens said that Tae Kwon Do is more than just kicking your opponent. "It is an art," said Stevens. "There is a mutual respect for each other. There's a high level of etiquette and good spirits involved with the sport."
