Fragmentary Design Aids Economy

Something new is to be shown in the way of scenery for the one-act plays to be presented at the assembly on Thursday morning at 10:30. Fragmentary sets will be used, consisting of just what is needed, and the frills are left to your imagination. This does not mean that the stage crew has neglected the frills; it has been working hard to do their part for the assembly program.

The doors will be closed promptly at 10:30 to avoid any distraction after the plays have begun. Come early so you won't miss out on this performance.

Dormitory To Open For Summer Term

It won't be long now before Nelson Hall will become the nucleus of CSTC life. Plans are being made to convert the hall into a girls' dormitory when the Army Air Crew leaves in June.

The dormitory will be ready for use when the summer session opens on June 12. Reservations are already being received for the summer term and for the regular school year beginning next fall.

Appoints Committee For 50th Anniversary

A committee has recently been appointed by President Hanson to make arrangements for the 50th Anniversary observance. Dean Herbert R. Steiner heads the committee as chairman. Other members are Miss Bessie May Allen, Miss Bertha Glenn, Peter J. Michelsen, Burton R. Peck and Miss Mary Roach. This committee will be responsible for the observance of the 50th year of the history of the college.

Use New Victory Set For Plays

Make Extensive Union Decorations

A look into Room 259, which was designed by Dr. Warren G. Jenkins for history classes, reveals considerable activity. A stage will be erected in the room and work will be carried on behind the curtains.

Classroom seats were removed and painting was begun on Thursday morning. A ceiling will fill a long felt need for a pleasant room for students and faculty members to spend leisure moments during the day. At times of commencement or any other times when parents are visiting, students may entertain them there.

Plans for the Union were formulated by the College Y. The room will be simply furnished at first, the furnishings including new drapes, lighting fixtures, davenports and chairs.

Teachers Attend Several Conventions

Miss May Roach returned Thursday from Chicago, where she attended a meeting of the Great Lakes section of the Rural Life Conference. She was one of the speakers on a panel discussion of "The Pre-Service Training of Rural Teachers." She was honored further by being elected Wisconsin chairman for next year's section.

Before going to Chicago, Miss Roach went to Madison where on Friday she addressed the kindergarten-primary section of the Southern Wisconsin Teachers Association. She was honored further by being elected Wisconsin chairman for next year's section.

It isn't the increase in enrollment that hastens the use of electricity. It is the fifth column work of forgetfulness and individual carelessness that the budget invokes. There is as much light needed for five people as there is for 50. Let us not both with the k ration book (k ratioh) and let's meet this offensive by the efforts of each and every one of us.

Soon the battle cry will be heard: "Kampus Kilolow Kampain Won!"

Must Wage Strong Fight Against Waste

Attention! G.I. and the campus crowd. Another major fighting line must be established, fought, and won on this campus at CSTC.

Exactly a year ago there was no necessity of rationing the use of electricity when the bill was $187 a month. But the sky's the limit in February 1944 with the staggering monthly sum of $500. No ration books have been issued allowing a certain number of kilowatt hours to be used yearly.

It was a pleasure to see representatives of the navy and former CSTC students in addition to the ever well-coming 97th aviation students.

It's Work — but It's Interesting

Today is Wednesday. As you read through the Pointer, it may be that you don't know that work on next week's paper has begun. Maybe you don't know how many hours are devoted to publishing a Pointer. Then maybe you are like one of the new reporters who was heard to remark, "I didn't realize there is so much work connected with it!"

On Tuesday week, before the paper is issued, assignments are placed on cards in a file box kept in the office. Reporters check their assignments and run about the building seeking persons to give them the names of faculty or students to interview.

On Monday night, from seven until almost midnight, corrections are made, and the stories are typed on standard "copy" paper. Sometimes news doesn't break until Monday, and some stories must be written that evening. The last copy must be at the printers before eight A.M. on Tuesday morning, so that the finished product in the afternoon.

There is a lull in the activity until 3:30 Tuesday afternoon. A member of the staff hurries to the printer, who gives him the "proof", i.e., the stories printed on long strips of paper, the first printing of the Pointer.

Four galley proofs are made, one for corrections, one for the dummy and one for each of the two faculty advisors.

Back in the Pointer office, the proof reader checks for errors. In the meantime, other members of the staff work on composition, cutting out the photos and pasting them in the dummy. When everything has been arranged, the stories are pasted on the correct page.

Again eight o'clock, on Wednesday morning, is the deadline for taking the dummy to the publisher. At 12:30, it's to the printer once more, this time for the final proof reading. All that remains is to wait for the delivery of the finished product in the afternoon.

This is the work of the editorial staff. The business and circulation angle is another lengthy story, one just as tedious. We, the Pointer Publishing office, enjoy almost every minute of the work, or we wouldn't be doing it. All we ask for is your continued cooperation.

Instructors Advocate History In Retrospect

Why not teach history backwards, from the present to the past? This is a question which many students ask, supporting the idea with convincing arguments.

Equally interesting are the comments of two faculty members who are teachers of history. Dean Elizabeth F. Shafer is considered an authority in the field of history, and it is believed that he would give a stimulating answer to the question, but he does not think that most students have a sufficient background in history to understand the material if it were presented in that way. Therefore, it would require much more reading and research than is commonly done by most college students.

"But," she added, "if it were well digested and conscientiously pursued by students, teaching history backwards would produce many worthwhile results."

Professor Fred M. Tolo stated that he thought it an excellent idea. "It is necessary to go backwards in history if we are to find a cure for the things that are wrong today," he said.

For the sake of clarity, history books are written in chronological sequence, but when an author writes he talks about the things he knows best—the things that seem most important to him now. "What we find as trends in history today and what stands out in history books is what people thought was or would be important decades or centuries ago," Doctor Tolo explained. "It is necessary to look backward in history in order to understand history in the making today."
Strictly G. I.

As this goes to press, we are busy pilots supreme, with the staggering total of five hours dual time—Ah yes, whoever said, "the life of a bird is a beautiful, free thing," was not just a 'joshin'! To be sure, our favorite son, Jos. E. Kelly, is still wandering around amidst a fuzzly atmosphere of "Right rudder — right stick," and, "Dammit, keep that altitude down!" Poor lad — Saturday afternoon, after his lessons, Mr. Kelly strode listlessly into the ready hut, and wet tears in his eyes, sadly exclaimed, "My instructor hates me!!

As a matter of fact we've really had a number of amusing occurrence in this 10 hours of elementary flight training. For instance—we're even toying with the lives of our instructors — Saturday afternoon, Messrs. Anderson and Peterson, instructors superb, had an almost too intimate meeting while out on the runway. It seems that A/S Frank T. Smith was executing a highly unorthodox maneuver, somewhat resembling a cross between a one wheel take off and a ground loop, just as the time Anderson's craft, with A/S Harry Radcliffe at the controls, was taxiing in the opposite direction! "A mile of smiles," remarked Mr. Smith, once again safe on the ground.—Mr. Lewis, an innocent bystander of the above, and also teacher of Civil Air Regulations, was later seen tearing up his textbooks and mumbling something about acrobatics at low altitudes! So it goes.

Who are these shameless gentlemen who repeatedly break out with the strains of "Dixie," when a certain young lass strolls by? Is it Mr. Emmett's classic melody, or is there a more pertinent connection involved?

Herman Bolte and F. G. McNally, the long and short of the 97th, may be seen at a local eating spot, preparing that no tours or remedial study enter into the scheme of things. A/S Walter "Dilbert" Carter can't understand he is being trained in Cubs. He says, "I thought the army used faster ships to fight in."

E-Z was a truly despondent group Sunday afternoon, because they were scheduled to fly again—whereas E-1 was as free as the proverbial breeze—Cub up lads, practice makes perfect, and who knows, after a few more Sunday afternoon sessions, you too may join the ranks of hot pilots!

In the approaching basketball tournament, Squadron C holds down the favors, and unless an upset ensues, C is looked upon as the logical champ.

One William Earle (The Voice) Lucas occasionally referred to as the "97th Nightingale" is now having romantic entanglements. It seems the aforementioned gift to womanhood is being cut out by Gloria Rybicke by one of his own squadron mates. To top this off, he is making no headway whatsoever with Martha, the beautiful little lass who works in the mess.

Due to the poor showing made by the permanent party members on their tri-weekly drill sessions, Lieut. Howlett has been working furiously on the lads in the Training school gym, trying to prepare the boys for future services, perhaps across the big waters!
