Albertson Flies From Vietnam For 3-Day Round Of Conferences

The president emphasized that the second team’s reaction was vividly as that by the first team, would be the same. Nevertheless, education, but would rather provide “basic guidelines” for the organization of the system. The conference was supported by public education if it had to develop an education system more strongly systematically.

Albertson explained that Vietnam is being discussed in our own efforts. We will try to renegotiate the system as soon as the Vietnamese are ready to do it. Either French, British, or American, he said.

The team’s study encompasses these levels of work. The program team’s work led to an international conference. It is the first step toward a “Strong Education System in Vietnam.”

With the Office of Research at the University of the Philippines, for the country’s three public universities, the team began its work in Vietnam in the fall of last year, and in some cases, even in the spring of this year.

During a recent interview with the president, he said that if the team was able to go to the other American universities, they would have already started.

The research team has been highly praised by the president. It is known as the University of British Columbia. Albertson Helms said, that there has been a very positive feedback on the project team.

Albertson stated that the U.S. government, which had a military victory, “is in the best position to help change the world. This is the time to bring,” he added.

Albertson’s recent work has been concentrated on the development of education system in the country’s three public universities. And he emphasized that “if Vietnam is ready, we can improve our educational system.”

U.C. Gets A Chance To Show Its Worths

During his recent three-day visit to WSU from Vietnam, President Franklin M. Ong organized a more active role in helping the South Vietnamese.

He told of the great need for books, especially for students attending the University of Vietnam in a country where the average lifespan of a book is three to five years. For these students, President Ong said, he plans to establish an American University in Vietnam.

The American University would be a three-year program where the students would learn more about American culture and history. The program would be open to students from all over Vietnam, and it would be fully funded by the government of the United States.

During the stay, President Ong focused on the importance of education in Vietnam and offered some suggestions for future programs. He emphasized the need for more resources and support to ensure that the program could be successful.

At the end of the trip, President Ong thanked the people of the United States for their support and commitment to education in Vietnam.

The American University in Vietnam is expected to open in 2024, and it will provide students with a unique opportunity to learn about American culture and history while also gaining valuable skills and experiences for their future careers.
