Bablitch Called "Kook"
By Colleague

State Senator William A. Bablitch last week took some verbal barbs from some of his more conservative colleagues. Bablitch introduced an amendment to a resolution introduced by Gordon Roseleip (R-Darlington) commending President Nixon for the recent expansion of the Point Four program. The resolution praised Nixon, John Connally, and others who "endured vilification as men of war while egnrstly seeking a just and lasting settlement."

Bablitch's amendment would have added that the Senate was "ashamed as Americans and had been aware that the President chose in December of 1972 to order a rain of bombs upon defenseless civilian populations, hospitals and American P.O.W. camps in North Vietnam at a rate unprecedented in the history of man, and totally contrary to all recognized rules of international law, moral standards, and standards of humane conduct."

"I've become aware of some of the students who have graduated here and we have some of the new buildings. "The physical education complex can be entered from the rear, but Specht thinks there is at least one area (of faculty offices) that the students could not reach."

Recent emphasis, said Specht, has centered on outdoor improvements. "Of course they don't have their choice of any building like some of the other students would have. Right now we've been trying to build up the approach and the crossings so that they can come into the academic area, and that's the curb situation making it possible for them to get around."

Asked about additional problems caused by construction, he described the construction as "a handicap for everyone. "He feels future construction should be in less congested areas, and "should not interfere with student movement around campus as much as it has." Specht added the widening of sidewalks ran into some opposition, though the expansion was made partially to accommodate handicapped students."

Specht revealed one complaint that is indicative of the type of problem a handicapped student may face. "We've had requests on the part of some handicapped to have additional power, emergency generators for experiments and so forth in braille...but again this is, expense-wise, difficult..."

For at least one visual handicapped student, bicycles presented a problem. The student in question was able to move about campus quite well without the aid of a white cane, but had no way of knowing which way to move upon hearing an approaching bicycle. The bicyclist, of course, would not realize that the student was unable to see.

The city, said Godfrey, recently added "rips in the sidewalk" to eliminate curb problems for those in wheelchairs. But, she added, "we've had some students who've gone through here without even that slight accommodation."

The winter months, she agrees, present an additional problem to handicapped students. "Weather is a problem for the paraplegic, whether confined to a wheelchair or crutches. To get along on icy or snow-packed walks is difficult."

Though she cites paraplegic and visually handicapped students who have graduated from here, Godfrey suspects that the handicapped student enrollment fluctuates normally. "I think they're in and out of the institution like other students, but I think we're more aware of them now. As the campus has grown... we have spread out and it's a little more difficult for them to get around."

According to Campus Planner, Raymond Specht, handicapped students are taken into account "considerably" from his end. "First of all, all new buildings fall under new laws and industrial codes. In those: every building must have a sloping ramp; must have an elevator or other means of going from floor to floor without being carried; must have in the building both men's and women's washroom and toilet-room facilities specially designed so that they can accommodate them. We are carrying on a program right now of putting curbs in (in all areas where new curbs are being developed) with the sloping situation for wheelchairs."

Specht is confident that the inclines of the ramps on campus can be negotiated in a wheelchair, but concedes that winter conditions of ramps is another matter. "Then you cont. to p. 3.
Tightening The University Belt

Problems Of Trimming The Budget

Part II

Many faculty members have been concerned about the recent budget reduction decisions for next year's budget which resulted in the cutting of about 25 full-time and 6 part-time faculty. The primary complaint is the faculty had only minimal input and involvement in the budget decisions.

These decisions resulted from recommendations to the chancellor and his assistants by the Biennial Budget Development Task Force (BBDTF) which worked with the dean in finding ways to trim the budget. Other than the few faculty members allowed to sit in on these meetings as advisors, faculty input and involvement in making cuts had to come up to the BBDTF through the dean.

Last summer, when the university had to trim the upcoming budget in compliance with Governor Lucy's 7.5% "productivity saving" and identify the university's 10 per cent low priority programs, chairmen of several faculty committees sat in on BBDTF meetings when they were

The Dean of the College of Professional Studies, Arthur Fritschel, stated he met with the department chairmen of his school who were on campus to discuss the budget cuts. Departments in the College of Letters and Science made some very definite recommendations to the dean where cuts could be made. Myrvyn Christopherson, chair of the Communications Department, under the College of Fine Arts, said during the summer the dean asked him to consider what programs or areas could be cut from his department. Christopherson said because the faculty in his department were not on campus, he didn't think this could adequately be done.

After this initial budget trimming, the university continued having to trim more from the upcoming budget due to the decrease in enrollment and the expected further decrease next fall. It was during this period when the major budget cuts were going to be made that faculty members felt they were not involved or not adequately informed about what was taking place.

During this period the deans had to make further reductions in their departments. Joseph Woodka dean of Letters and Science, said he had wanted the departments to plan the budget cuts for themselves, but after the shortfall, budget cuts had to be made quickly and the chairmen of the departments had to make suggestions to trim temporarily to make up the difference because tenured faculty were not to be cut.

Smith was asked if his department had to make up part of this difference. He said he didn't think so in the case of his department, but that it was in others.

Smith said there were less necessary functions which could have been cut more in his opinion such as administration and protection and security. He feels there is too much paper work being done and not enough teaching.

In the College of Professional Studies, Fritschel also had to make recommendations to the BBDTF. He said he worked with the administration and the department chairmen in making the cuts in his school and tried to protect the existence of areas. He said he made one of the decisions which he had to make was whether to keep the Gesell Institute as a program and it was decided it would be continued.

Fritschel said he normally supported the recommendations on persons to be released from the department involved. But, Fritschel added, in many cases, he was obvious who to who would be released by which position was cut.

Hanford of Fine Arts said that he tried to get as much faculty input as possible in making recommendations to the BBDTF. He said he also kept in mind the size of the department and enrollment in the department. Hanford stated both the deans and the administration were involved in making the final budget reduction decisions. He said there were meetings with the BBDTF where the deans had a chance to argue their points.

Hanford stated he asked each chairman in his school to make suggestions as to who the department could reallocate with the least number of problems and took the recommendations from the department level were accepted by him.

Woodka stated when he made up his recommendations he had people in mind as to who would be cut from a department but only for his own budgetary purposes, in order to come up with the dollar figure which had to be saved in his school. He stated in all cases the departments themselves would decide who would be cut but necessarily have to follow the recommendation of the dean. But they would have to meet the dollar figure that had been set.

Woodka said before submitting his recommendations to the BBDTF, the Letters and Science Department faculty committee reviewed the recommendations, and there was a discussion of recommendations between himself, the BBDTF, and the administrative council. Woodka stated he involved the faculty committees.

Dave Smith of the Geography Department, which last 3 to positions in November and December, he was notified and asked to comment on the recommendations made by Woodka. He said he was told where the cuts would probably be and his objections were overridden. The amount of departments in the budget cuts was minimal and that he was advised of the cuts only as a courtesy.

When asked if the department had free will to make recommendations to the dean, Smith stated if there had been choices within the department, changes might have been made. When the suggested cuts were the only ones that could have been made, he said this was the reason Smith was asked if he thought the cuts in his department were fair and he said geography had the lowest teaching load and the highest research and Science and the cuts were in proportion to the decrease in enrollment.

Wooodka had stated since some departments were almost fully tenured, other departments not as tenured would have to take a cut temporarily to make up the difference because tenured faculty were not to be cut. Smith was asked if his department had to make up part of this difference. He said he didn't think so in the case of his department, but that it was in others.

Smith said there were less necessary functions which could have been cut more in his opinion such as administration and protection and security. He feels there is too much paper work being done and not enough teaching.

In the College of Professional Studies, Fritschel also had to make recommendations to the BBDTF. He said he worked with the administration and the department chairmen in making the cuts in his school and tried to protect the existence of areas. He said he made one of the decisions which he had to make was whether to keep the Gesell Institute as a program and it was decided it would be continued.

Fritschel said he normally supported the recommendations on persons to be released from the department involved. But, Fritschel added, in many cases, he was obvious who to who would be released by which position was cut.

Hanford of Fine Arts said that he tried to get as much faculty input as possible in making recommendations to the BBDTF. He said he also kept in mind the size of the department and enrollment in the department. Hanford stated both the deans and the administration were involved in making the final budget reduction decisions. He said there were meetings with the BBDTF where the deans had a chance to argue their points.

Hanford stated he asked each chairman in his school to make suggestions as to who the department could reallocate with the least number of problems and took the recommendations from the department level were accepted by him.

Christopherson, of the Communications Department, said he was faced with having to trim next year's budget which he had been working on with the BBDTF meetings when they could when the major budget cuts for his school but after the faculty in his department were not on campus. He then explained that he was faced with having to trim his school to make up the difference because tenured faculty were not to be cut. Christopherson said there had been no input to the dean's office as to how many positions would be cut from the department, and that this was the first time the department was really involved. He explained he then sent a letter to the deans in making his recommendations he was going to make cuts temporarily to make up the difference because tenured faculty were not to be cut. Christopherson said there was some willingness in the faculty to take a cut in salary. These recommendations were not accepted except for one part-time faculty.

These recommendations were not accepted except for one part-time faculty. Christopherson said the dean and the BBDTF decided to cut another full-time position and some part-time positions.

Christopherson said in his department there was much confusion and the faculty felt intimidated. They didn't feel they had control over their careers. He explained that he was not a clear understanding of what was expected of the faculty. He said there was no provision for full participation on the part of faculty or faculty representatives and Christopherson feels that the faculty did not have a major role in the budget reductions.

Elwin Sigmund, assistant to Gorden Hafrebeck in Academic Affairs, said the budget decisions are the chancellor's and faculty can only make recommendations to him. A faculty committee did sit in on meetings of the BBDTF when the major budget decisions were made during the fall term. This committee and Sigmund stated it reacted primarily to what had already been done. He said if this committee is going to be a real one to cut the budget, they would be been seriously considered.

"We shot a bunch of roots which is commonly called a mud duck. There no good to eat but there good to笑笑 there are lot of them."

The next passage indicates that the person who wrote it is having some degree of difficulty in expressing their thoughts in a logical and creative manner.

There is a part, to see if he can remedy some of the problems he has encountered.

Woodka stated his department has a language, English Department is broadening its teaching and writing lab which will be a resource for the entire university community.

There has been a growing realization in English that both faculty and student comments, that a real need exists for a center wherein students can seek help with any problems of difficulty encountered in the area of writing and language.

Problems with themes, book reports, term papers, essay exams and language, in general, arise with many (perhaps most) students. The writing lab is created with the primary goal of answering questions and helping students to learn how to avoid those same problems in the future by developing a sensitivity towards their language and their writing.

instance, for when the power goes off and they’re suddenly caught on some of these floors. There was a period of time when we had a project of some sort that blew out, had some sort of a project of some sort that blew out, shutting our power off for lengthy periods of time, overnight, sometimes 10 or 15 hours. However, this cost is so great that it just doesn’t seem feasible. It’s just one of those things that we don’t do. But, I think it has to be hand-carrying that person down if they’re caught on a floor at that particular point.”

He noted that emergency phones which light up in Campus Security have been installed in the event of an emergency. A formal program has been established to accommodate the student’s needs. There are plans for modifying any existing dorm rooms, but no one has ever given as much thought to this as this program has. Now, there is a van which transports students to and from classes. Said Godfrey, “We think this is a step in the right direction. A formal program is going in that direction, a formal program.”

Godfrey expressed the belief that handicapped students are largely financed by outside agencies, such as the Vocational Rehabilitation Program, money and other gifts obtained from family and friends of the students.

At least one other campus in the UW System (Whitewater) has a fairly extensive day care program for handicapped students. Assistant Director of Housing, Melvin Karg, did say handicapped students who sought assistance in locating off-campus housing would be assisted. Godfrey noted one room in residence hall was designed specifically for use by a handicapped student, but no one knew of any other on-campus accommodations available. The project has not been developed for the student who needs help in areas other than residence halls, Godfrey said. "One thing we think is important is to get people to go in that direction, to formalize it for the handicapped program."

Godfrey spoke of the fact that handicapped students are frequently involved in day care programs, but Godfrey said the particular interest of an individual in the Education Department there had resulted in his obtaining funds through program development. Among the services which are available there is a van which transports students to and from classes. Said Godfrey, "There’s a program that some students feel is very important is that there is a fine line as to what people feel we have in terms of handling their condition or asking for assistance. I feel this gives the student a chance to see how well or be she can “handle” the campus. Godfrey expressed his concern about the overall situation here. "I’m impressed with the awareness and the readiness of all the people involved. I think we’ve done a good job, yet I’m impressed with the handicapped students themselves. There’s a fine line as to what they have in terms of handling their condition or asking for assistance."
"What is your opinion of the elimination of funding for the Ethnic and Minorities Study Center?"

Terry Harper (President, Black Student Coalition): As far as I am concerned, I am really against the elimination of the program because I look at it just like the Documents Depository in the library. They have that facility there because most of the information that they receive is recent information. The way Mr. Lederer operated his office, you could come in there any time of the week and his information was current. It is not like the library where you grab a book off the shelf and it is a year old (and that’s pretty new for a library book.) His information came out of newspapers today, yesterday; within the week. It is not current and it involves all minorities including the Polish community which is a majority in the Stevens Point area but yet still (is) considered a minority. It is not just Blacks and Native Americans.

Russell Nelson (Professor of History): I think the University of Wisconsin should have at least one office that handles ethnic and minorities studies as an informational office. I don’t know that it has to be in Stevens Point but I think the funding should not be completely eliminated.

Donna Robinson: I think it will be a great loss to this university. I have used the Ethnic Center for studies for political science and it does come in handy. A lot of students could use it for political science, for history, sociology. It will be a great loss to this university and the students. It is not only for the minority students but also for the non-minority students, the white students.

Ed Vieth: I don’t believe it should be eliminated. I think it is something that is important. There are increasing numbers of minority groups coming to universities, (Stevens Point’s enrollment of minority groups has increased) and I think the funds should not be eliminated.

Margarita (Mick) Martinez: I think it is a shame. The only effort, really, by the university system and now it is being eliminated. The center wasn’t really my idea of what an ethnic center should have been, but it was a good step toward it: toward the fulfillment of a center in the university system that would really work to make minorities and the problems of minorities known and to help bring programs into the system. But now it’s dying and I don’t know how long it will be before we get anything else started. And that’s really a pity. To begin with there has never been that much of an effort made anywhere in Wisconsin to really work with the minorities. Well, there is an exception: the programs out of Whitewater. But that is only one university. How many are there in the system in Wisconsin?

Steve Piotrowski: First, the center itself was basically a liberal cop-out to the real problems that exist. For what the center did: the funding should have continued; but, at the same time, it was not any sort of real solution. Cutting off the funding, as such, doesn’t make any major change or major harm to what is going on. But, at the same time, it eliminates a small step that was taken.

Russell Nelson: I guess I don’t feel the center should be eliminated. I work very avidly with the Chicanos and the Chicano tutoring program. I think the center is very necessary for this program. Without the center I think the program is going to suffer a lot.

Margaret Hassey: I think it is unfair because the purpose of the whole thing was to get people aware of the things that are happening in the minority groups. By then closing it and eliminating the issue, the minds of a lot of people will be closed to the facts of life and things happening to the minority groups.

Bassey Umem (Nigerian student): I think that should be a program which should be encouraged. I mean an international institution. In fact, I personally have been questioning why we don’t have African studies in the university. I think it’s a very good thing and if it isn’t done, I think in the future, the foreign students, particularly the African students, would like to bring it up with the authorities of this school. To establish a very yesterday; within the relationship between America and Africa, I think, is a very good thing to do. It should be encouraged.

Jean-Anz (Jay) Day: I really don’t think that it should be cut because I think every body needs it in this university. It’s not supposed to be for just Stevens Point; it’s supposed to be for the whole state university system. So, it shouldn’t be just funded by Stevens Point but Stevens Point should have some input into it. It also should be funded by other universities; by not just one, but all. Maybe the regents should have something to do with it. I think the regents should be able to help us in some way.
Sweet Music, Beautiful Lyrics

Record Review

FOR THE ROSES. Joni Mitchell. Asylum, SD 5657.

By Russ Marrs

She takes you into her world of love and life, love and sadness, but to anyone who listens, it holds to her sweet music and beautiful lyrics. She displays her artistic abilities. She has an important message for you. There are just a few of the many sensations one receives when listening to "For the Roses," by Joni Mitchell.

The inside sleeve explicitly shows that Joni composes and signs all of her own songs. This is what is called true talent in the recording industry. The purchaser not only receives that sweet voice, but also receives a beautiful water-color sketch of Joni herself, painted by herself. Further still, inside she sheds, to show her openness with nature and nature only.

"Banquet" the first song sets the pace for the rest of the album. "Some get the gravy some get the gristle and someone gets nothing - though there's plenty to spare." It's her piano and angry chords that captivate the listener from the beginning till the end. "Cold Blue Steel and Sweet Fire" with its ironic lyrics is about the taste of smacks, a well known drug.

Cold Blue Steel out of money. One eye for the beat police, others for Sweet Fire calling, "You can't deny me Now you know what you need." Underneath the jungle gym Hollow gray fire - escape thief looking for Sweet Fire Shadow of Lady Release "Some with me I know the way," she says it's down, down, down the dark ladder.

With the aid of ironic lyrics, and the sensual singing, and with the help of Tommy Scott's need, this song is one of the best in the album offers. For the Roses" the title song, ends the first side. In this song she portrays what fame does to the life of a person who chooses music as a career. Through explanation, her message becomes both cynical and realistic. "Up the charts off to the airport." Your names in the news - Everythings first class. The lights go down: And it's just you up there - Getting them to feel like that." Joni Mitchell said about a photograph of Joni Mitchell's life. Her life is one of great feeling for people no matter whom they be. This song, to me, is truly the best of the album.

The second side deals with the more love-related side of Joni Mitchell. "See You Sometime" has great sensibilities of love and romantic competition. "Pack your suspenders - I'll come meet you your plane - No need to surrender - I just want to see you again." These lines brought to mind the name James Taylor, who Joni was to have been very fond of. With the sweet piano and tender singing it is a must to be heard. She begins the song as a separate voice and, as the song winds down, in a more manageable alto type voice.

"You can't hold the hand of a rock and roll man - very long" is a song about those nasty little rumors that go on about you behind your back. She's true, and also beautiful in relaying this message. Stephen Stills also adds a little flavor by playing guitar on this cut. This song, like the album's theme song, are attempts to relay a message to the listener.

"Judgment of the Moon and Stars," the last song on the album, touches upon the great Beethoven. "It's the judgment of the moon and stars - Your solitary path." She's merely paying tribute to one of the greatest composers of all times in this song. One whom she obviously has great respect for.

If you're a Joni Mitchell freak, or if you just like to listen to sweet music with excellent lyrics, then I strongly suggest you purchase this album. No, I do not work for Asylum Records, but I wish I did. This is her best album since the first unedited album she recorded. Remember also the fantastic art work with the cover holds. It is available almost anywhere for four bucks.

The great thing about Science, new Speculative, Fiction is economy: you get more than you pay for. SF means science, profit and prophecy. You buy a book, read it, put it aside and, five years later, what it contained may well have become history. And, if those contents are still speculative, i.e., too zany to have been manufactured yet, reading them is like copyright, is renewable.

Consider Cities of Wonder, a Macfadden paperback edited by Damon Knight. The cost is 75 cents. It contains everything printed in which printing you buy. There is no noise in the difference between the 1967 and the 1972 versions. Only the cover design has changed to justify the 75 cent price hike.

Walter Miller Jr.'s "Dumb Waiter" (p. 22) provides an ultimate in urban renewal. The unnamed metropolis is totally automated. And, that 1967 automation: robot cops who arrest, robot judges who sentence and robot jailers who understand regulations more than prisoners wasn't exactly unknown when the story was first published in 1967.

A Heinlein story is always a happy encounter, and his "It's a Great To Be Back!" (p. 73) is no exception. Allan and Josephine McLean have had it with the Moon. Their pad at Luna City had all the inconveniences of New York City and none of the Big Apple's pleasures. So, they return to Earth. But, not for long. They quickly tire of being looked at as "loners" and suffering noise and air pollution. 424th Street has been too long ago and, wouldn't you know it, you still have to wait six months for a plumber. The Mcleans blast back to the Moon as quickly as they can, while this story awaits Heinlein's updates 1973 imagination. Nine other selections complete the metropolitan panorama. There is Stephen Vincent Benet's more familiar "By the Waters of Babylon" balanced off with Henry Kuttner's punny "Jesting Pilot." Brishers E.M. Forster and Brian Aldiss are represented, along with perhaps the best of J.G. Ballard. His 1962 "Billionium" (p. 93) nicely integrates the humor and horror SF can best provide. All Ballard does is extrapolate a common city ailment: inadequate housing. The rents are rising; space is at a premium; no person may have an area of more than three square meters to call his own. But, the central character, a man named Ward, isn't worried. He has found a large attic no one else knows about. He quite his job at the nearby library to sublet and landlord over his hidden territory. And then, he makes the mistake of... but, you read it and see what you think.

"Think," that important five letter word further economy and entertainment Editor Knight has labeled Cities of Wonder. His name, like most of the eleven authors included, is one to keep in mind when looking for reading that has yet to be put on a required list. Cities of Wonder is available in the University Store. At least, there were sight copies on the shelf last Saturday.

Book Review

By Sylvia Becker. Ms. Becker is a teacher of English at UW-SP. She was intrigued among Harmsen's many excellent contributions to nature writing is his latest book, Birds of Prey of Wisconsin. The text, as clear and colorful country air and richly spiced with Harmsenian humor, provides insights into the habitats and eccentricities of hawks, vultures, eagles and owls. The reader learns, for instance, that hawks often miss their quarry but that owls seldom do; that screech owls have predilection for nesting on college campuses where they are apt to defend their territory with diving screaming coeds and knocking hats from professors' heads; that the barred hawks always skim a frog before consuming it, seemingly aware that the skin is somewhat poisonous.

The Author has a gift for describing the sights and sounds of wild-life. "The stooj (dive) of a goshawk sounds like tearing silk as it cuts downward through the air. A noise of the sneeze, she demurs with finality lingering myths about birds of prey. "If you walk round and round a sitting owl to test the old story that an owl will swallow its head you will find it can do nothing of the sort." Fran Harmsen's great understanding and admiration for these beautiful walkers imparts transfers to the reader as he, too, begins, in fancy, to soar like an eagle and to hunt like a hawk.

Frank Crow, chairman of the Faculty Senate's Advisory Committee of the faculty committee which is working on the BSBTF. He stated that the committee was only advisory and that it would not be influencing the various budget committees. But he said the committee had imposed some guidelines on the faculty viewpoints were he.

The guidelines of the committee said that there would be more vacancy input.

Besides problems of faculty input, there was a problem of lack of faculty understanding of what the faculty would be doing while budget decisions were being made. Allen Bloomfield of the local Association of University of Wisconsin at Madison said that the majority of the faculty didn't know what was going on and he felt there was poor communication about the whole matter.

After the decisions had been made, 73-75 percent productivity cuts, these decisions were made available to the faculty in a report according to Sigmund. But the 10 percent who were not included were not. Haferbecker said the reasoning behind this was at the time the faculty was not expected to be used in any way. But the faculty felt the administration did not want the faculty to get upset about the cuts.

Besides the enrollment decreased, these low priority programs were taken even though it does not hurt to trim the budget. Haferbecker said and only some of the low priority programs had been cut, cutting the budget but only having the faculty in the position to be able to save $200,000 but the low priority programs were not released. This apparently caused some concern on the part of the faculty because Chancellor Dreyfus released a memo containing an explanation of why the listing could not be released.

In the memo, Dreyfus stated three reasons for not releasing the listing:

First, that section (the low priority) is the working paper, in my opinion and subject to change. Second, programs may be included to exercise all those cuts, it seems unnecessary to destructive to inform the faculty when about that low listing of his program department.

Marketplace Of Opinion: Speaker's Corner

Editor's Note: This semester the Pointer is fortunate to have correspondents with the Semester-in-Britain program at Peace Haven in London. Dubbed (by their own choice) the "Peasants of Peace Haven," these students will be sending as much material as their schedules permit.

Racism, homosexuality, Mother-in-Law Imperialism, reincarnation and Anti-Americanism come together in one of the world's most unusual spots. At Speakers' Corner in Hyde Park, persons of every persuasion can exhort, harangue and scream out their beliefs and prejudices.

From a distance Speakers' Corner appears, especially to an American, to be one huge demonstration. Upon closer inspection, the visitor realizes that the great mass is really a collection of small groups, each rallied around orators on milk cases or step ladders. One such orator is a young, bearded, long-haired blond man who insists he is Jesus. His ankle-length embroidered muslin robe blows against his bare ankles; his sandals are fashioned from black loafers. A member of the audience challenges his statements that he has found the ultimate answers to the human dilemma. The speaker listens politely and then passively proceeds with his message.

"Is there really someone up there who cares for us?" the white atheist asks. "Do you really believe that someone up there cares whether England joins the Common Market? Or that he is concerned about the price of beef?" The audience chuckles.

The speaker on Mother-in-Law Imperialism: "You meet a young man. You like him; he likes you. You take him home. Your parents ask how much money his family has, what their work is. 'Is it a Rood family?' They decide it isn't. They tell you not to marry that one."

Your parents ask how much money his family has, what their work is. 'Is it a good family?' They decide it isn't. They tell you not to marry that one.

At some places, the speakers are so close to one another that their voices clash, vying for the listeners attention. English bobbies (policemen) stroll through the mass; at the IRA speaker's stand there are five. They are there, not to arrest the radicals or silence the anti-British, but to protect the rights of the speakers. And, apart from the tumult, in a quiet spot, stands the Salvation Army. In a moderate voice a clean-shaven young man in black uniform tells of his conversion. In a semi-circle behind him the other members listen courteously and then join him in a hymn.

Every Sunday the speakers gather at Speakers' Corner. For more than one hundred years (since 1867) it has been the rallying point for agitators and reformists. Their message is clear: Listen and repent; the end is at hand.
"Now That The War Is Over"

Over the past generation the United States has spent some $137 billion dollars in destroying a small Southeast Asian country. Now, with no apologies for the damage done, it has apparently decided to withdraw. We must emphasize the word "apparently," for central to United States policy on Indochina has been deliberate lies and deception. Contrary to the sugary optimism of the network commentator, the current actions of the Nixon Administration are to be regarded with extreme wary eye. The United States refused to honor the Geneva accords in 1954. We have even more reason today to question its willingness to carry out the present agreement.

The cease-fire agreement signed this weekend, if implemented, is a victory for the North Vietnamese and, ultimately, the Vietnamese people. In return for the release of American prisoners of war the Vietnamese have secured the withdrawal of U.S. military forces from Vietnam proper. The North will continue to fight for reunification and a significant life for the Vietnamese, something the Thieu regime in the South has no intention of allowing. Hopefully, they will be able to go through with it this time. The Vietnamese have been fighting for some thirty years, struggling against French colonialism, America and the fascist governments they have put in power. They have taken quite a beating and have been tried twice before (in 1945 and 1954) into believing that they had secured peace and independence. It will be an unspeakable tragedy if this is again the case.

Why did the United States ever become involved in Vietnam? Were we fighting for "peace, freedom, and democracy?" Hardy. Proof of this are the governments the United States established in the South over the past twenty years, from Diem to Thieu. The U.S. fought in Vietnam to prove to the Third World its determination to maintain capitalism against communist guerrilla wars of national liberation. If this was our overall objective we have failed completely. If anything, we have proved that we are not capable of winning such encounters, even with a policy of near total destruction. It will be a cold day in hell before the people of a Third World country in Asia, Africa, or Latin America invite the U.S. military machine into its borders. It has become all too clear that we have failed completely.

The University As Vocational School

The fate of UW-SP's first "Superstructure," Old Main is now in the hands of the State Building Commission and Joint Finance Committee. The impending destruction of this facility and the possible future construction of a scale model paper machine this campus, offer a symbolic insight into the "progress" being made by American civilization. In the last century, this university was housed within the walls of Old Main: no new construction sites; no air hammers; no juked boxes and no "education." The university despaired of "new perversion bus" that the blade of poverty and "interact with..."

Blasted Tenure

To the Editor:

In one word, tenure stinks. It is probably the one most important item holding back Wisconsin College Education. Our high schools produce many fine graduates, often times because they have highly motivated, enthusiastic teachers. The average college teachers range from 22-45 years old. These teachers care about their students; they are willing to learn their names; willing to find out about their hard times and good times; they are ready for human interaction. Human interaction is the greatest area of learning, and the teacher who has the awareness of this is probably a better teacher than most. Many of our college educators don't have this quality or once had it but have lost it in some department meeting, where three of the five department heads decide how everyone else should do their job. The world everywhere is the same, the good student and the bad. Now, Stevens Point educators, sit down and think about this before you come after me. First think about your department and the rats sent of backslappers you have. If you feel you have honestly done that, then you have my permission to look at the other departments which are in the same situation. Now look at our administrators, department heads, deans, assistant deans and people in student services who also offer to their coffee and noondrinks; the best they can do is charge a fee. Again, change in any way must be by me. I have been in the position where I have had to charge for a class, but there are some definite offenders, stagnated or progressed at Stevens Point and held our institution back. In some cases, I have been told about Stevens Point known in academia. In some cases, people have not been able to come out with the education they need. Stevens Point, I have been told, has not been a good educational setting. Hundreds of students have not been able to get their education here. If you want to learn, I have been told, you will have to go to another college. That is true. If you want to learn, you will have to go to another college. If you are a good student, you must find the reason for your failure. That is true. If you want to learn, you will have to go to another college. If you are a good student, you must find the reason for your failure. That is true.

The discipline you lack on your part is a reason why others are not blamed. The students who are not admitted to your students, and those of you who wail in mediocrity are producing mediocrity. You are un-disciplined in your search through this land called education. You cannot be in individual discipline and I say this to students, faculty, the administration and the world.
ison soap operas. The purpose of this role is to teach serious students to think. The university becomes a system that is maintained and nurtured under conditions supposedly to the promotion unable to eliminate the misery and the world, instead promotes super which merely perpetuate the system. It would have us believe used in ghettos, in unemployment, hunger are the result of a failure to business community.'

To The History Dept.

Dr. Justus Paul

In an effort to show the approval and a people—namely, the Black People—Black students all over the United States are participating in a time to make contributions known, and make efforts to erase the many misconceptions and myths held by the dominant culture—namely, "White" society. Black Cultural Week replaces the former Negro History Week and so the title of Black awareness rose all over the country, including Stevens Point, and the dramatic change from "Negro" to "Black"

Chairman, Curricular Committee

The University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point

We saw the growth and active participation of a group of students, the Black Coalition, whose main objective is to spread Black Culture and include Black History in all phases of the curriculum. Gentlemen, we have witnessed the growth of the Black student population from the unlucky number of thirteen to a proud number of 50, over the years. Also, we have seen in great and other sister universities the rise and formation of Afro-American departments in Madison, Milwaukee and again, on the local level, the acceptance and formulation of a separate Ethnic and Minorities Center.

Keeping the above facts in mind, on the local and state level, I would like to call your attention, as a Black student, to your participation in History 380 entitled "Negro as a people". It is important that the course I wish to criticize but the wording of its title, for the reasons explained so clearly by Malcolm X: "Negro is erroneously used and is degrading in the eyes of informed and self-respecting groups. It denotes stereotyped and debased traits of character and classifies a whole segment of humanity on the basis of false information. From all intelligent viewpoints, it is a badge of slavery and helps to prolong and perpetuate oppression and discrimination."

"We accept the use of Afro-American, African, and Black man in reference to persons of African heritage. To every other part of mankind goes this measure of just respect. We do not desire more nor shall we accept Black History."

I would appreciate it if the History Department would look into this and change the title of the course to Afro-American History or Black History, in keeping with feelings of Black students and Black people.

Yours Sincerely,

Dave Marie

Adrift In A Sea Of Scandal

The Nixon Administration is likely to drown in a flood of scandal that will reach its peak by the end of the year. A tough old bird, was told unreported facts of the scandal by Speaker Carl Albert and came away, he says, "shaking and with goose pimples. In- interestingly, the Accounting Office (goals, national committees are reputedly stunned and "sickened" by what they are finding. Counterparts Evans and Novak, identi- the Administration, say this may become the Republicans "Hiss case."

New York Times editorial tells of "a complex, farreaching and sinister operation on the part of White House aides and the Nixon campaign organization. This operation involves sabotage, forgeroy, theft of confidential files, surveillance of Democratic candidates and their families and persistent efforts to lay the basis for possible blackmail and intimidation... It cannot be reiterated too strongly that such practices are unprecedented in American politics. No national party and no incumbent Administration has ever set out in this systematic fashion to invade the privacy, disrupt the activities, and discredit the leadership of the political opposition. These are ambitious and police-state tactics which have no place in democracy."

Inevitably, there are comparisons with the bully boy tactics of the Nazis during the Weimar Republic.

Hitler wrote in "Mein Kampf": "At a given signal (the attacker) unleashes a veritable barrage of lies and slanders whatever adversary seems most dangerous, until the nerves of the attacked person break down... This is a tactic based on a precise calculation of all human weaknesses, and its result will lead to success with almost mathematical certainty... The defeated ad- versary in most cases despair of the success of any further resistance."

"No more precise analysis of Nazi tactics, as Hitler was eventually to develop them, was ever written.

Author Irving Wallace writes: "Observe the time-tested technique, closely. See how Nixon & Company attempt to discredit McGovern, triggering bullets of lies and distortions about his finances, his voting record, his friends, you name it. See how they attack on McGovern attack McGovern, attack McGovern and his men."

President Involved in Scandal

The Washington Post, which has dug up most of the information, says the allegations "add up to the most arrogant assault ever mounted in a political process. The attack on the government and the credibility of the people. Unchallenged in any substantial way, day by day, they draw an ever closer circle around the oval office, right up to its doorkeeper. White House aides tampering with the judicial process, former White House aides running around with briefcases, former cabinet officer keeping and controlling a slush fund to finance political sabotage, and the President's lawyer paying off a saboteur, go far beyond any game we can get involved in. The people have not exactly strangers to him (the President). They know his mind. They know his character... They know his men, and do they what he demands them to do."

Influenza is a serious virus disease affecting the ears, nose, throat, lungs, bronchi, tubular lungs, and lung tissue. Several different influenza viruses have been identified from studies made during epidemics. The symptoms of each of the types are similar. The severity of the disease varies from mild to severe, depending upon the age and general previous health of the patient who becomes infected.

The three types are: Type A, Type B, and Type C. Type A and Type B are primarily human pathogens, while Type C is primarily a feline pathogen. Type A and Type B can infect both humans and animals, while Type C primarily infects cats.

The influenza virus causes an acute respiratory illness characterized by fever, fatigue, muscle aches, cough, sore throat, and sometimes vomiting and diarrhea.

The virus is spread through respiratory droplets generated when an infected person coughs or sneezes. The droplets can then be inhaled by someone else or land on surfaces and then be touched by others.

Influenza is caused by the influenza virus, which is a type of RNA virus. It is a highly contagious virus that spreads easily from person to person through the air. The virus infects the lining of the respiratory tract, causing inflammation and swelling.

The virus is transmitted primarily through respiratory droplets produced when an infected person coughs or sneezes. These droplets can be inhaled by others or land on surfaces and then be touched by others.

Influenza is a serious disease that can cause hospitalization and death, especially in young children, elderly people, and those with underlying medical conditions. Therefore, it is important to take preventive measures to reduce the risk of transmission.

Preventive measures include:

-Vaccination: Getting vaccinated is the best way to prevent influenza. It is recommended for everyone who is at least 6 months old, including pregnant women.

-Handwashing: Washing hands with soap and water is one of the best ways to prevent the spread of influenza.

-Avoiding close contact: Try to stay at least 6 feet away from people who are sick.

-Coughing and sneezing etiquette: Cover your mouth and nose with a tissue when you cough or sneeze, and throw the tissue away immediately.

-Cleaning and disinfecting: Clean and disinfect frequently touched objects and surfaces.

-Staying home when sick: If you are feeling sick, stay home to help prevent spreading the infection to others.

In addition to these preventive measures, it is also important to be aware of the symptoms of influenza and to seek medical attention if you are feeling sick.

Symptoms of influenza include:

- Fever
- Cough
- Muscle aches
- Fatigue
- Headache
- Nausea
- Vomiting
- Diarrhea

If you have symptoms of influenza, it is important to call your healthcare provider or seek medical attention as soon as possible.

Women's Program Scheduled

"Come to Life," third annual Continuing Education Day for Women here, has been set for Saturday, March 31.

The annual program, which was initiated three years ago by Steven Point community women, has been co-sponsored each year by the UW-GW Alumni Association and the Office of Extended Services.

Campus planning the Planning Committee are Sue Schrup, Mrs. Ernest Wyshoke and Mrs. Arden Lange. Barbara Farlow of the extended services staff and Susan Kraner of the alumni office assist with administrative help.

Dreyfus Speaks

Chancellor Dreyfus will speak to the State University of New York Tuesday, February 4, 1973. The meeting is open to the public. Dreyfus will speak on the following topics: Athletics; Student Recruitment; Tenure and the future. The speech will be given in lecture room 116 of the QIPS building beginning at 8:00 p.m.
Counseling Center Offers Development Groups

The Counseling Center will be initiating a series of groups for interested students during the current semester. The groups are intended to meet the developmental needs of a wide range of student concerns. Groups will be offered in the following areas: (1) Vocational Exploration, which will focus on the development of: (1) self-knowledge, (2) the ability to analyze one's personality, (3) decision making, (4) the ability to handle personal problems, and (5) the ability to cope with stress; (2) Interpersonal Communications Training Lab; (3) Couples; and (5) Learning Skills.

The Vocational Exploration Groups will run for three weeks (a total of three class periods). Students will be asked to take interest inventory a week in advance of the first group meeting. The group meetings will center on an overview of major factors in making vocational decisions; review of the interest inventory results; and the development of, and formation of individual "game plans" with respect to careers.

The Personal Growth Groups will run the entire semester, meeting for one and one-half hours per week. The groups will focus on the development of: (1) interpersonal competence; (2) the ability to communicate about one's own and other members' behavior; (3) a tolerance for ambiguity and interpersonal anxiety; (4) the capacity for open, honest, trusting relationships; and (5) the ability to meet the power issue in relationships. The groups will run the entire semester, an hour and a half each week.

Grade Review Procedure

Recently, first semester grades were mailed out to the students at Stevens Point. If a real grievance has arisen over the grade received by a student at this university, the Screening Office may be contacted to determine if procedures should be used to supply the needed information. This includes the name of the student, the name or number of the course involved, the name of the instructor of that course and the reasons why the grade received is considered to be a unfair.

Student Gov't. Elections

Student Government elections will be held on Feb. 6, 7, and 8. Eight seats are currently open. Petitions may be picked up at the Student Activities Office in the University Center. The deadline for filing petitions is Feb. 5 at 11 a.m.

Correction On Assassination Article

In the article on the John F. Kennedy assassination, which appeared in the November 17, 1972 issue of the Pointer an error was made concerning the re-entertainment given to the Point. It should have read in the following manner: Reprinted with permission from "Computers and Automation" May, 1971, copyright 1968 by and published by Berkley Enterprises, Inc., 115 Washington St., Newtonville, Mass. 02160. Also, it is falsely stated that computers were used in the production of the information in the article. Actually, part two of the article, as it appeared in "Computers and Automation," talks about how computers might be used for dealing with the photographic evidence, but computers were not used in the production of the information in the article.

The Student Government can only act as the students do, because we are also students. Help give us a boost, give yourself a boost, give the university a boost. The attack should be levelled at the students, the government can only be as progressive as the students want it to be.

The UWSP-Environmental Council announces that they will sponsor an outstanding faculty award this year. The award, formerly sponsored by Nu Alpha Tau, professional conservation fraternity, is presented to a member of the faculty who is active in environmental problems outside the classroom. It was based on a quotation from former dean, Paul Vambr, "Conservation is more than sitting in the classroom and watching the environment becoming polluted."

Past recipients are Dr. Paul Yambert and Dr. Frederick Baumgartner (1969), and Dr. Kent D. Hall (1970).

All members of the UWSP faculty are eligible for nomination. Any recognized student organization may nominate a faculty member for the award, by sending written notice or a representative to the Environmental Council office, room 222 Main. Nominations will be closed February 10, 1973.

The vote for the final recipient will be in the hands of the faculty February 14 by the Environmental Council. Any campus organization may elect a member on the Environmental Council. Presentation will be at the College of Natural Resources Banquet on February 17.

Matters are currently brought to my attention which concern your opinions. I have a fine group of students working with me and for you. It should be of utmost importance to you to let these people know of your opinions, the Student Government is for you. We act as the business office, financial consultants on student activity fees, project office, faculty monitoring group, administration liaison, and student defenders on campus. You should start to realize that your rights as students are constantly challenged by the administration, the Board of Regents, and the faculty. This fine group of nearly one hundred students who stick theirs necks out and put their noses in where they should be (it takes guts to be in Student Government) have defended you well the first semester. It is time you take pride in your Student Government and your school. Your interest and enthusiasm needs a good swift kick in the pants. Some of you have tunnel vision from when you step on board the first semester to when you graduate. You've really missed the boat by not helping to govern your future right here on our little campus, which probably has the most potential for student input, opinion, and governance of any school in the state.

Perhaps things at Stevens Point aren't the way you would like them to be; some student before you has defaulted just as you are now. Why don't you try and help the situation before you leave, to make it better for those who follow? Don't criticize any older generation for their lack of change and betterment until we show we have a right to criticize. We can gain this right by showing them that we can do better. Help get the leading organization on campus going. Come in and let us know you're willing to help. We can find spots for you as you gain experience. Freshmen and sophomores, Student Government is an excellent place for you to show leadership. We need new people, many of the leaders now are juniors and seniors, it is time for the torch to pass. Your idle criticism is lazy. Get into activities and get this place going. If you're going to graduate from here then, you had better help make this university the best possible place from which to receive a degree.

All girls interested in this question should drop by the Intramural Office from 6 to 9 o’clock February 12 to state their views. A regulation will be passed based upon the majority view, and it will go into effect at semester of next year.

Independent Open Intramural Season

By Jerry Long

Most of the scores reported in the Pointer’s weekly feature were from the dormitory leagues. During the winter season, the independent leagues began their season, so we shall concern ourselves with those league’s scores.

Highly touted Glutレス Maxiumus put together halves of 30 and 48 to 21, but Dylan Ross led the Banners in the second half, 32-15. Mark Kreuger with 16 points, Dave Gitter with 14, led the Crushers to a 90 to 25 win. With a name like that, the Five might be deserving of the New England Patriots treatment.

The Taxi Squad took the Tommies for a ride and a 69 to 10 victory. Mike Lounsbury accounted for over half of the Squad’s score with 36 points. West Smith ran over 2 North and the Mavericks 44-24. Steve LaCount then scored the first point lead, 15-0, but he had 13 points and Marcia Engelbreton with 13, put the game out of reach with one minute left in the 4th quarter. At that time, Point had netted one more free-throw, but the score held at 50-41 to end the game.

Matmen Triumph

By Phil Eschef

Co-captains Roger Suh (167) and Bob Bassuener (142) combined for a pair of wins each to help lead the UW-SP wrestling team to two big wins over River Falls 32-15 and Platteville 22-20, at Platteville last weekend.

“I’m very proud and happy with the team’s effort, not only as a team but also as individuals,” stated an elated Pointer wrestling coach, Reg Wicks. “I was sort of optimistic going into the weekend but we just refused to play dead.”

The Pointers opened against the Falcons, who had finished second in the conference meet last year, and before River Falls knew what hit them the “U” had opened a 22-0 lead. Pete Dario (138) won on forfeit and Brusky then pinned his man in 3:04. Steve LaCount (134) followed suit with the second fastest pin of the year for Point in 1:32 and Bassuener won his match in 1:40. After Rick Thomas (150) drew and Pee Wee Suhlen (158) was beaten 10-9 by Tom Kubisak, Suhr pinned his man in 2:04 and in the 1st weight class, Dario defeated Nenot 6-4, to wrap up the match.

“We knew we had to beat them in the lighter weights,” said Wicks, “the main thing though was that we beat them or conditioning.”

Going up against Platteville proved to be the biggest chore of the afternoon. The Pioneers had beaten Point last year and, earlier in the day, had lost to River Falls 36-15 but had had a breather while the Pointers wrestled the Falls.

The “U” fell behind early when Doro got beat 7-0 and Brusky was pinned by Ron Sierra in 1:39. La Count then scored the first points of the match as he battled to a 2-1 tie.

“Steve did a fine job this weekend,” said Coach Wicks, “last weekend he was off but he made a fine comeback.”

Bassuener, next on the list followed with his second win and Thomas provided the biggest surprise of the meet when he pinned Mike Kastern in 2:34 of the second period to tie the meet 11-11.

Pee Wee returned to form in this match as he recorded his seventh pin of the year, tops on the squad, a 2:25 masterpiece over George Lettinger.

Suhr upped the margin to 20-11, with a 6-2 win but the Pioneers came storming back to tie it as Wayne Jendy beat Neipert 5-0 and Don Lutz who was wrestling for the alling John Nevens was pinned in 4:30. “He had a big heart,” said Wicks, “and I almost didn’t let him wrestle but the meet was done, so I had to.”

Thus, the meet came down to the heavyweight class where “Killer Al” Jankowski faced Warren Pitts. The “Killer” had lost his first match of the day against the Falls and after two periods was trailing 2-1. Then suddenly Jankowski escaped, scored a take down and a three point near fall and the match was his, 7-2.

With the two conference dual meet wins Point now stands 3-1 in conference action and 6-2 overall for the year.

“We have as much talent as anybody in the conference,” commented the Pointer’s head grappler, “Thomas did a fine job and I thought Brusky, Suhlen and Neipert all showed sparks of brilliance. I hope they keep it up.”

Next for the Pointer grapplers will be a non-conference meet with Ripon, at Ripon this Wednesday and then a weekend off. One thing though remains and that is the Pointer Wrestler’s are to be reckoned with.
