‘Art-ie’: insensitivity or oversensitivity

Peister Magazine is an issue-oriented publication, and we tend to take our issues pretty seriously. Regular student issues are no exception. We helped break the story of last summer’s Nigerian beating incident, followed the investigation through to its conclusion, and made our abhorrence of such incidents abundantly clear in numerous editorials. We’ve also devoted many pages to positive foreign student developments, such as the International Club, Weekend, and Dinner; Ko Thi Dancers; Semester Abroad; and the Minority Peer Counseling Program.

Once a year, on our April Fool’s issue, we do a parody of our magazine, poking fun at our own seriousness, and playing things for laughs. Though its prominence in our pages made the Nigerian incident potential parody material, we felt the issue was too sensitive. A gag article submitted on the subject was discarded, even though it made fun of racists, not foreign students. We even went so far as to alter the column logo for Insecurity Reports (which was taken from the same book of newspaper clip-art as our regular Security Reports logo). Because of the way the new logo was designed, it made the person lying down look like he might be black. Though none of our staffers thought we were being paranoid, we insisted the logo be altered to avoid any standstill.

We wish to assure our readers that we would not go through that kind of trouble if we meant to ridicule foreign students with the half-page April Fool feature, “Igbo Ar’tie.”

Contrary to the views expressed in several of this week’s letters, “Igbo Art-ie” was not an issue to foreign students, but a parody of a full-page photo essay on an art exhibit, run in the March 3 issue of the magazine. We were poking fun at our own feature, and would have used photographs of artifacts from any culture—be it Early American, Middle East, or Letter-Day Punk—that had received similar exposure in our pages. The feature was meant to resemble a child’s “educational” game. No inuit to foreign students and their cultural heritage was intended—and none, we feel, was given.

As to claims of insensitivity on our part, we quite a few people whose sensitivity is above average have indicated that they found the issue—including “Igbo Art-ie”—harshly funny, and not demeaning, tasteless, insensitive, adolescent, grossly irresponsible, or any of those other poor, abused adjectives.

Though we genuinely regret the misunderstanding, we feel it has been caused not by insensitivity, but oversensitivity.

We had intended to use this week’s Viewpoints space to express our disgust over the racist showery-and the consequences of proposed Reagan cuts in minority education programs, but felt we had to address this “issue” instead. Maybe next week.

No solution to racism with violence reincarnate

As one who is viewing the turbulent racial situation in Stevens Point with a critical mind, it is disappointing to have to include InCAR as party to the milieu of entities working toward improvement of racial relations in Stevens Point.

Up from Madison, the International Committee Against Racism brought with it organizational experience, dedicated representatives, and a desire to improve the racial relations in this area. For making its efforts it can be commended.

However, their presence has proven not commendable to date. Employing tactics which may be “successful” in Madison, InCAR has used erroneous literature, a violently provocative newspaper, and an organizational meeting, all of which laid the use of violence to quell the violence of racism, to pronounce their arrival and spread their message.

Contrary to InCAR’s blustering claims there have been no murders of Nigerian students at UWSP, and there is no evidence that the administration “here too” is “using racism to ensure total subordination of the university to big business and defense research.” These claims are made from ignorance, and do not address the problems of racism in Stevens Point.

In looking at the racial situation in Stevens Point it is evident that something is amiss. The events of the last year show that community relations can, and need to be, improved. However, there are some people who look at the “critics” with some doubt. The presence of InCAR’s tactics will unfairly taint the view of the critics by those people who are not ready to admit that non-whites do have some problems in this community. Doing this, a solution to the problems of race relations in Stevens Point is postponed.

Brochure puts rape myths to rest

Rape occurs outdoors or in dark alleys? Not necessarily. Fifty-six percent of all reported rapes take place in victims' residences. There are a lot of myths about rape, and the locations where they occur is one of them.

An informational brochure entitled, "What You Need to Know About Sexual Assault," has been published for public distribution by UWSP. It calls attention to incorrect myths and the opposing facts about rapes. The brochure also gives advice on precautions that can be taken for safety, what people can do if they feel threatened or are attacked, and lists specific programs that UWSP and community agencies sponsor to prevent sexual assault.

There are listings of telephone numbers that can be used by assault victims seeking help.

These are some of the myths and facts that are discussed:

Myth—sex is a prerequisite for rape. Fact—study shows that the major motives for rape are aggression, anger and hostility, not sexual desire.

Myth—rape usually occurs between total strangers. Fact—in most cases, the assailant and victim have had prior contact. More than one-third of all rapes occur between persons who are acquainted or live in the same neighborhood.

Myth—individuals who are raped are asking for it. Fact—in a majority of rapes, the rapist carries a weapon or threatens the victim with death. The primary reaction of victims is fear for their lives.

The brochure recommends that if people are attacked they should attempt to throw the assailant off guard. Most rapists reportedly expect victims to be passive. If an escape cannot be made, victims are urged to talk to the attacker in assertive and non-pleading ways.

Victims are advised to seek immediate medical help and not to bathe or change clothing.

About 5,000 copies of the brochure have been printed, with funds from the Student Government Association.

Distribution will be made both on and off campus. People may write to the Student Government Association, UW-Stevens Point, 54481, for free copies.

Another specific program offered by the university as a public service is a physical education course on health and safety enhancement which focuses on personal defense. The staff of Protective Services provides sexual assault seminars and self-defense training on request. The Women's Resources Center sponsors preventative programs and referral.

There is a pre-recorded message on "What to do if raped" available from the UWSP HELP office at 346-4357. People are told to ask for tape number 301 when the receptionist answers.

Skin deep problems

"Racism, Resurgence and Reconciliation," a program and workshop being offered by UWSP Interfaith Council, Thursday, April 21, 1983.

Racism is a negative attitude and prejudice that we have toward people who are racially different from us, will be the focus of two very important events that will take place on the UWSP campus, Thursday, April 21.

At 3:00 p.m. the movie, "Resurgence: The Movement for Equality Versus the Ku Klux Klan," will be shown in the Nicotell-Marquette Room of the University Center. Mr. Chuck Ruehle, co-director of The Lutheran Human Relations Association will be present to lead a discussion following the showing of the film. Admission is free and open to the public.

At 7:00 p.m. a workshop titled, "Racism: Resurgence and Reconciliation," will be held in the Communications Room of the University Center on the UWSP campus.

Participants will examine their own attitudes and values that contribute to the racism that is a part of all of us, and also look at how racist practices are built into institutions and systems within our society. Enrollment for the workshop is limited to 50 people, so pre-registration is required. Sign up to participate in the workshop by calling 346-4466. There is no charge for the workshop, which will be led by Chuck Ruehle.

Chuck Ruehle, besides his work in helping to direct the Lutheran Human Relations Association in Milwaukee, has helped to lead many workshops on racism and sexism. He is an active member of the American Lutheran Church, a graduate of Wartburg Theological Seminary in Dubuque, Iowa, and has long been involved in the struggle for justice and for better human relations.

The movie and workshop are both sponsored by the UWSP Interfaith Council, an ecumenical organization composed of representatives from the religious student organizations in the UWSP community.

Brothertons featured in LRC

A traveling photo exhibit on the history of the Brotherton Indians will be on display at the Albertson Learning Resource Center through May and during the LRC campus throughout April. The Brotherton nation is comprised of members of the Mohegan, Narragansett, Montauk, Niantic and Tunxis nations. Most members of those tribes were killed by disease or famine. The remaining New England nations followed Samson Occom, a Mohegan minister, to New York, where they settled on land given it by the Oneida nation.

In the early nineteenth century, New York gave half of the Brotherton land to white settlers. The tribe then traveled west, and settled on the eastern shore of Lake Winnebago, on land donated by New England and Winnebago tribes.

Maps tracing the tribe's journey back to Wisconsin are on display, as are pictures showing tribes living during the past century. Several Brothertons became successful farmers and craftsmen in the Fond du Lac and Oshkosh area.

Oops! The joke is on Pointer Mag

In the April 7 issue of Pointer Magazines, a picture of four clay creations was run on the back page. An editorial staff believed this was the gag picture for that week's page which is regularly submitted by the photo department. Oops, that wasn't the case.

Gallagher to discuss graphic art and design

Jerome E. Gallagher, a new member of the art department, will discuss his work in the history of the Brotherton Fine Arts Colloquium series this fall semester at UWSP.

Gallagher, who joined the art faculty last fall, is a specialist in graphic art and design. He will speak at 7 p.m. Thursday, April 14, in Room A108 Fine Arts Center. Gallagher is invited to attend free of charge.

The International Folk Dancers, a student organization at UWSP, will present its annual concert Friday and Saturday, April 15 and 16.

The concert, entitled "Dance: A Celebration of Life," will be held in the Sentsy Theatre.

Tickets for each 8 p.m. performance are now available at Park Ridge Pharmacy, Clark's Corner, and the Information Desk in the University Center in Stevens Point; the Tea Shop in Wau- sau, and Church's Drugstore in Wisconsin Rapids.

The group is committed to the preservation of ethnic heritage through dance. Its repertoire consists of 100 dances from countries throughout the world, including Romania, Scotland, Israel, and Poland.

Its 35 members attend dance workshops throughout the country, and some perform authentic dances studying abroad.

The concert is sponsored by the College on the Arts, and is supported by the Student Government Association and the Student Activities Commission.

Another specific program offered by the university as a public service is a physical education course on health and safety enhancement which focuses on personal defense. The staff of Protective Services provides sexual assault seminars and self-defense training on request. The Women's Resources Center sponsors preventative programs and referral.

Faculty benefit concert here

Mezzo-soprano Judy May and pianist Michael Keller, members of the music faculty, will perform at 8 p.m. Sunday, April 17, in a recital to benefit the music department scholarship fund...

The concert will be held in the UWSP Student Union in April 21, 1983.

To Pointer Magazine,

Why was the 13th Annual Wildlife Conclave such an overwhelming success? That sounds like a tough question but there really is an easy answer. The answer can be found collectively in each and every individual who was unselfishly dedicated to the planning and pulling off of the conclave.

Special thanks go to Bob Busch of the University Center for recognizing the value and importance of this event to UWSP students, and to Sheri Gutman from Conference and Reservations for her professional guidance throughout the planning stages. Groebne 'Art-ie'

To Pointer Magazine,

I am writing to register my great sense of disbelief and discouragement at the publication of Pointer "Gag"azine, April 1, Volume 1, No. 1, the insert in line April 10, 1983 issue of Pointer Magazine.

I am certain that you are aware, even before I continue this letter, that I am speaking specifically about an article titled, "Igbo Art-ie" which appears on the penultimate page of the insert. I should like to make some observations about the insensitivity that is evidenced by your having published such a thing in the insert.

As you are well aware, Dr. Lisa Aronson of the University department and Ms. Nancy Callcott together with several Nigerian students and others, worked very diligently in order to obtain a fine exhibition of Igbo cultural materials which was displayed on this campus.

This admirable effort was an attempt to help educate our two communities about Nigerian culture. The many dedicated people who made this cultural exchange a reality were committed to building understanding. What, then, are we to think of the demeaning article in the April Fools' issue? Oh, you may say, we published a disclaimer. After all, the insert is called "Gag"azine. I am the double entendre planned; it is then the only genuine humorous, albeit ironic, comment on the entire publication.

I was personally gratified a few issues back to see that you had graciously included my name as one who was to be praised for his efforts to build the community. Your publication of the tasteless and adolescent "Art-ie" makes the previous compliment ring hollow in the ears of those who were so singled out for your praise.

As co-advisor to the International Student Club and as faculty advisor to the SGA's Committee for Minority Affairs, I am doubly dismayed. The understanding that many have struggled to foster on this campus and in this community has been betrayed by a lack of reason and good taste. There may be those, among your readers, who find this material to be extremely funny. I, sir, do not.

When I spoke to Mr. Ham, asking him if he could see that such material might be offensive to a number of people, causing them personal hurt, he said that he felt no such offense could be taken. I then told him that I intended to write this letter, which he immediately did. I regret that he was unable to accept the invitation that I extended to him on behalf of the International Club, to come and share his views with us about the publication of this article. Regrettably he was also unable to accept the invitation, on behalf of the Nigerian Student Association, to speak to the Nigerians, whose Igbo people had been demeaned, and who were eager to hear his comments.

I sincerely wish that the efforts of some of your talented staff were given to genuine satire, parody and irony—forms which hold an honored place in the literature of humankind. "Igbo Art-ie," however, fits none of these literary categories. Such materials, that destroy the dignity of a single individual, diminish the humanity of us all.

In medieval society, the fool served an important function. He was the conscience of the community, often able to express the unexpressed, to curb the excesses of a despotic monarch or nobility. The Wise Fool is a time-honored tradition. His "foolishness" contains an inherent innocence and wisdom that presents a humorous foil to foibles and shortcomings. I see no such redeeming quality in this tasteless publication.

Angry about
'Art-ie'

To Pointer Magazine,

This is to refer to your portrayal of the Nigerian Art-works in the April 8 issue of the Pointer as "Igbo Art-ie," from the darkest Africa. Frankly speaking, there is no doubt in anybody's mind that your insert was an orchestrated effort to make a hilarious mockery of the people of Africa and specifically the Nigerians. Now that you have achieved your aim, I would like you to realize that the insert was in bad taste. Actually, I think that only those people who lack unpolished respect and appreciation for their culture and that of other people will see something funny about the insert.

However, it goes a long way to tell all reasonable people the "flip-flop, blap-flap, and drip-drop" (to use your words) persons at the helm of affairs of the magazine meant to foster the education of the students of this university. Certainly so, that part of your April foolishness was a slap in the face of the people of the Federal Republic of Nigeria. The "Igbo Art-ie" is nothing short of a cheap snipe at the dignity of the Nigerian people as the part of the architect of the insert. How I wish you would have exercised the minimum amount of common sense required when compiling your expensive and rancid jokes. It is not funny at all.

Concerned with deficits
Ford optimistic about U.S. economy

By Joseph Vanden Plas
Senior News Editor

Echoing several of Ronald Reagan's convictions, former Republican President Ford said he was optimistic about the economic future of the United States.

Ford spoke to several hundred Wisconsin high school students at the Ninth Melvin R. Laird Youth Leadership Conference at UWSP last week.

In a question and answer session with the students, Ford supported President Reagan's economic policies and said the nation had to take "strong medicine" to cure its economic ills. He cited the reduction in the inflation rate, positive signs the recession was ending and a stabilizing unemployment rate as reasons for his optimism.

However, he said prolonged federal deficits could cause an "impulse recovery. "What concerns me is the back-to-back-to-back-to-back federal deficits that range in the magnitude from $170 billion to $190 billion a year," he remarked. "Congress and the White House have an obligation to get those out-year deficits under control, and the projections in the president's budget or in the democratic budget in the House are not satisfactory. The American people must demand a better performance on those out-year deficits."

He said the out-year deficits could be reduced by rescinding tax indexation scheduled to begin in 1982 or by imposing an import duty. "We need the revenue to moderate those out-year deficits," he stressed.

Ford, who defeated Reagan for the GOP presidential nomination in 1976 and nearly became his running mate in 1980, supported the president's $1.6 trillion defense program and his choice of strategic weapons systems. Nevertheless, he said it would be wise to spread out the five-year build up. "I think it would have been a better plan if it would have been spread out over five years, to stretch it out six years. I don't know what's sacrosanct about a 66-month program. I happen to think it would be wiser to achieve the same results in 72 months, I know it would have a very beneficial impact on the annual cash flow and a corresponding benefit in the deficits," he claimed.

Moreover, Ford praised Reagan's efforts to reduce the rate of domestic spending increase. "I would keep pressure on the rate of growth of domestic spending," declared Ford. "A lot of people think if we could reduce the rate of domestic spending that would be a very good thing."

Ford also said he wouldn't repeal July's scheduled 10 percent income tax rate reduction. "I'd want to know how he would deal with the Soviet Union, Ford said he: 1) would be willing to sit down and negotiate with the Soviets on strategic and intermediate range missiles; 2) would build U.S. defenses in the interim. He said U.S. strategic forces were "no better than the Soviet's, and U.S. conventional forces, with the exception of the Navy, were undermanned and undergunned."

The former chief executive also said he favors Reagan's peace initiative. The Reagan plan calls for Palestinian autonomy on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza strip. Begin has responded to the Reagan plan by building more Israeli settlements on the West Bank. "It's mandatory for all parties to rejecting President Reagan's peace initiative. The Reagan plan calls for Palestinian autonomy on the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza strip. Begin has responded to the Reagan plan by building more Israeli settlements on the West Bank. "It's mandatory for all parties to get to the bargaining table," Ford stated. "I think it was a mistake for Mr. Begin to give President Reagan's proposal the back of his hand, which he did."

Incumbent West unopposed in SGA presidential election

By Chris Celichowski

Pointer News Editor

How are popular elections in the Soviet Union this year's student government presidential election the same? In both cases, incumbents run unopposed. Any further similarities between the elections would be hard, at best, to make. However, the fact remains that if incumbent Scott West is running for a second term with no opposition. Why is no one else running for SGA's top spot?

According to SGA executive board member Bill Campbell, the willingness and capacity to devote long hours to the presidency tops the list of deterrents to potential candidates. "I work with only 30 hours per week, he's lucky," said Campbell. As a College of Natural Resources major with a large credit load, Campbell admitted he simply does not have the necessary time to do a good job.

Steve Senski was encouraged to run by a Bruce Assardo reached the limit during last year's hotly contested election. Scott Hull had thrown his hat into the SGA presidential ring, but withdrew from the race early. The head of College Republicans did not want to jeopardize his chances at an internship next semester in Washington, D.C.

In addition to the time factor, many of those interviewed by Pointer Magazine pointed to the costs of mounting a legitimate campaign. Student government has a $300 spending limit on presidential campaigns, and West admitted vice-president Joan West knows he could not afford those costs. He felt the overwhelming advantage of his incumbent status was very scary, at least for me, to run against an incumbent," he also noted SGA's need for consistent funds to vote in their residence halls.

College Republicans did not want to jeopardize his chances at an internship next semester in Washington, D.C. in interest on loans totaling $1 million was still payable in the ins and outs of student government, and a winning incumbent prevents that.

An incumbent, however, remains of little value unless a candidate has a solid record to run on. Few people have leveled severe, substantiated criticism against West strong enough to tip the scales in his re-election. Sarah Dunham, who would give up the vice-presidency to apply for SGA budget director, took it one step further.

"I think it would be a waste of time and money for anyone to try a challenge," said Senator Jerry Grob. As an incumbent West knows the intricacies of student government, and his re-election would help the organization get a jump on next year by offering needed continuity, Grob added.

In a way, he himself admitted the winning incumbent seeking a second term. "Perhaps the greatest support out there, his is a lot of that candidate's fairly strong record have scattered any opposition. Despite the lack of any viable opposition at this time, Pointer Magazine encourages all students to vote next Wednesday and Thursday in the SGA presidential and senatorial elections.

Polling places

Students planning to vote in the Student Government elections for president, vice president and for the senate April 20-21, are to cast their ballots at the following locations:

- All on-campus students are to vote in their residence halls.
- Off-campus students vote according to their districts. Students from the College of Letters and Science vote in Collins Classroom Center, students from the College of Professional Studies vote in COPS, students from the College of Fine Arts vote in the Fine Arts Building, and students from the College of Natural Resources vote in the CNR building.

According to Scott Hull, time, money, an incumbent candidate, and that candidate's fairly strong record have scattered any opposition.

"I think Scott has a lot of support out there," she said. Most of those interviewed said West's primary contribution was increasing and strengthening bonds between UWSP and the Stevens Point community. They noted his role in forming the Minority Action Council and placing a student on the Stevens Point Common Council.

Although he feels "very good" about next year, West said he hoped to make several improvements. His primary focus, if elected, will be to make it easier for student organizations seeking money to get it. This year's budget director, Bob Boehm, took a conservative approach to allocation of SGA funds.

However, Boehm's approach has left SGA in strong financial shape. According to West, SGA earned $22,000 in interest on reserves this year. West predicted Sarah Dunham, if chosen for the budget director's position, would likely take a more liberal approach to disbursements.

Unopposed candidates strike at the heart of our political traditions. Issues concerning an electorate are always better clarified when there is a diversity of opinion. This year, time, money, an

Of 500,000 loans totaling $500 million granted since 1965, $737 million was still outstanding last Sept. 30. The average delinquency period for loans was 30 days if calculated over a 1½ year period spanning 1980-1981. March of Dimes walk slated for April 23

By Joan Klussendorf
Special to Pointer Magazine

Despite the fact that the weatherman isn't giving us a spring, the calendar says spring is here. And with every spring comes a special day for the March of Dimes (MOD) and for people all over the country.

On Saturday, April 23, the National MOD WalkAmerica will be held in Stevens Point. We won't be walking across America—only 25 km in the Point area. But thousands of people from Boston to Dallas to Los Angeles will be walking for the March of Dimes and the prevention of birth defects.

What is the March of Dimes all about? And why are thousands of people turning out in these cities to put some miles on their shoes?

First of all, the March of Dimes is a national organization of volunteers whose goal is the prevention of birth defects. We move towards our goal by getting volunteers to help organize and run events such as WalkAmerica, going to other organizations to speak about different birth defects and good prenatal care, and writing and distributing material on these subjects and more. MOD also funds hospitals and clinics for equipment and personnel needed to deal with newborns with birth defects such as open spine, low birth weight, and no arms or legs.

All these activities, including educational programming for the public on good health care for themselves and newborns, need to have some source of monetary income. That's where WalkAmerica and our other fundraising events come in. And that's where anybody and everybody can participate in an easy, fun way to help support and maintain these vital social services.

WalkAmerica has been held here in Stevens Point for the last 9 years. We have had UWSP participation in the last 3 years, and we ask for your help again.

WalkAmerica begins at 6 a.m. on Saturday, April 23, rain date April 24. Registration is from 8:45 a.m. at Iverson Park. After the 25 kilometer route, a picnic will be held at Iverson for all participants.

You may still be wondering what the participants of the Walk will get for their time and efforts. The survivors will receive some certificates and will be competing for prizes. Individuals bringing in the most money will get tennis shoes or dinners for two at area restaurants, with the top prize being a ten-speed bike. Groups participating in the Teamwalk, such as residence halls and campus organizations, will be competing for a trophy.

But maybe the best "prize" of all is the fun the participants have with their friends and the new people they meet, as well as the satisfaction felt when one realizes they're helping people who will probably never meet.

Journal of the State Senate

STATE

Madison — A bipartisan legislative panel proposed that employers pay an increased tax and some benefits be cut from the state's unemployment compensation fund.

The panel, which came up with the plan after a 10-member Unemployment Compensation Advisory Council could not reach agreement on reforms, raised the wage base on which employers pay into the compensation fund from the current $8,019 to $9,700 by 1986. Tax increases would also go up to a maximum of 8.5 percent.

Additionally, the amount of weeks workers can be allowed to stay on jobless benefits would be reduced from 34 to 26 weeks. The amount of weeks workers must be employed to qualify for benefits would increase from 16 to 19 weeks by 1986.

All jobless benefits paid would be frozen until 1986 and any future changes would have to be made by the state legislature.
Hart continues his rebellion

By John C. Savagian
Editorial Writer

“Ere we lose our utopian dreams, think not of minor schemes. Think grand, think illustrious, be bold and industrious, build your dreams with a vision that defies all revisions.”

Were we a dreamless people, how uninspired we would be. Our thoughts would only assume that which has gone before us as an answer to our problems. We would live in a land that knew no changes, in a society that suffered the ills of a millennium of stagnation. Good ideas, often the product of our wildest dreams, would bounce harmlessly off our closed minds. Those who dared to open their minds would be labeled grand schemers,” and “utopian dreamers.” We would pack them up in boxes and ship them off to other lands where dreams and illusions of a new world brook no opposition.

While we don’t live in such a world, looking over our political landscape gives us plenty of examples of politicians who have given up dreaming. They appear afraid to criticize lest they be shipped off to distant lands if they dare offer a new vision. Fortunately there are a few people who defy conventionalism and rebel at the thought of ideological stagnation. One of those individuals was on campus last week, spreading his vision of the new social order and outlining the hard facts about the long road we have ahead before we achieve that vision.

His name is William Osborne Hart, a citizen of Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, and a member of the Labor and Farm Party. Mr. Hart spoke to an overflow audience in the Turner Room last Tuesday. His talk was sponsored by Phi Alpha Theta and the Political Science Association.

During his fifty years of political activity, Mr. Hart has run for public office 21 times. He has a string of 21 defeats as well. His last campaign was for the Senate seat occupied by Mr. Proxmire. Mr. Hart ran as a candidate for the Labor and Farm Party and garnered a total of 2 percent of the vote. What was perhaps more surprising, and Mr. Hart would argue more important, was the number of organizations that supported him, from the Women’s Caucus to the local affiliates of the AFL-CIO. Hart contends that this is indicative of the fact that people are looking for new political solutions to problems spawned by the old political parties.

But having passed the 70-year mark, Mr. Hart is ready to let the younger visionaries carry the torch, as he is content to speak out and offer challenges to the old order from his position as a host on a Madison call-in titled “What’s your problem?” and as a commentator for Wisconsin Public Radio. Yet even though he has retired from the campaign trail, a promise he warns every politician breaks, it was evident by his comments that his concern for the oppressed people everywhere keeps him from ever giving up the “good fight.”

“During my fifty years on the left, I’ve seen all sorts of deals heralded as our economic salvation: the New Deal, the Fair Deal, the Frontier, the Great Society, Reaganism, Reaganism, and yet the chasm between the haves and the have-nots remains, and it grows. The old-line parties have failed miserably to meet the needs and challenges of our state and America. There is a need for alternative political movements, and there is willingness on the part of people to make a break with the past,” Mr. Hart said.

Encapsulating a socialist movement that stretches from “Moore to Marx to William Morris” is a major task for anyone to complete in an hour presentation. Mr. Hart showed his skill as a speaker by keeping the audience both amused at his anecdotes accumulated over the years, and stimulated to thoughts on the coming of the new social order. He was most emphatic on his position of the role violence would play in the changing circumstances. Hart has always rejected the notion that “economic democracy, social change, and human betterment comes at the end of a rifle barrel.” He prefers the approach embodied in the old International Workers of the World slogan: “They work in industries, we rebel at the ill of a last Tuesday.

With the hard, cold political realities we must face in attempting to reorder society, Mr. Hart told the audience that we must never give up dreaming, for while our criticisms of the "old order" must be founded upon facts that speak as testament to the problems of war, poverty, starvation, and pollution, we must also show a vision of what that "new order" might be. For it is this vision which helps to motivate us toward that common goal.

Our utopian tradition is not based on a frivolous aspect of western culture which dreams but never acts. Mr. Hart noted that we all dream for a better world, that the great movements of this century, most notably the Civil Rights movement and today the Nuclear Freeze movement, would have gotten nowhere if people did not have a dream. For Mr. Hart, that dream is best summed up by a poem of Katherine Lee Bates, from which he quoted a line: "Oh beautiful for patriots dream that sees beyond the years, thine alabaster cities gleam, undreamt by human tears. But our cities and our rural places are peopled by an infinity of have-nots who are the members of the underclass, who have waited all these years for that dream of Katherine Lee Bates.”

It is a dream we all probably share in. Mr. Hart’s fledgling Labor and Farm Party addresses these problems, offers answers, and keeps alive the dream. “It gives me hope,” he concluded, “that ere I make my demise...we’ll have a political movement strong enough to cause a reorder of all our priorities, that both government and economic system will be mastered by and not master of all of us.”

There are times, the Career Counseling and Placement Office realizes that there's a place for us in the job market. For students attending "effective in advertising," there's a place for us in the job market.

According to Ms. Walters, the purpose of the Career Counseling and Placement Office is to assist students in locating promotional activities. Career counseling is open to all students regardless of class standing. In conjunction with counseling, information is available on the supply and demand of academic majors in future employment opportunities.

Portfolio Writers

Whether seeking entry into graduate school, preparing an impressive, creative portfolio may be the single most important thing you do. Portfolios are widely associated with occupations in art areas and are also effective in advertising, journalism, teaching, graphic design and other fields.

According to Lorry Thomasgard Walters, placement counselor at UWSP, there are two types of portfolios: the formal organized format standard

The Resume: Keeping it sharp and simple

By Fred Poole

The resume is a place where the student can present a snapshot of his or her background and interests. The resume should be a one-page document, and the student should not try to include too much information.

In an interview with Walters, the student was asked how to prepare their resume. Walters suggested that the student should begin with a clear format. Walters pointed to the standard categories as an example of how to present your experience and education. Walters said, "It's important to be clear and concise." Walters also emphasized the importance of the thank-you letter. Ms. Walters said, "Most people don't think about it, but it's very important." Walters recommended sending a thank-you letter after an interview. It should include a summary of your presentation and the stages of your interest in that position. Walters also emphasized the importance of a strong portfolio. She said, "It should be less formal than the application letter, but it should be more detailed." Walters also encouraged students to include additional information such as education, employment history, related experience and references.

Walters offered helpful hints to those who have not yet written a resume. Walters continued, "It's important to be clear and concise. It's also important to be creative. The portfolio should be a reflection of your personality. And remember, it's important to be professional. Don't make it personal." Walters also emphasized the importance of the thank-you letter. Job talk: the art of the interview

By Laura Sternweis

Pointers for interview—observing the interviewer

Whether you have landed a wonderful job in the real world, you’re going to have to go through at least one interview. You’re going to have to sell yourself, but you don’t have to sell yourself cheap. Be prepared for that interview.

The Career Services (Placement) Office, room 134 Old Main, offers many tips on how to prepare yourself for the “interview.” First of all, think positive, be patient, and be aggressive. Believe in yourself. If you don’t, nobody else will either.

Try to figure out what types of questions the interviewer might ask you. Do a little role playing. Have a friend play the interviewer and ask you those typical questions. You might practice answering those questions in front of a mirror so you’ll see what you’ll look like to the interviewer.

Speaking of looks, remember to dress right. That means be neat, clean, and show good taste. Women should wear tailored separates, jacketed suits, dresses, or pantsuits. Men do well with grey or navy pinstriped suits, white cotton long-collared shirts, “quiet” ties, and cap-toe or wing-tip shoes. A beard or excessive facial hair may hurt you (in the interview, of course). Do your homework before you interview yourself. Sit up, look alert, and pay attention. Keep eye contact, but don’t stare.

In the 1983 edition of Insurance Careers, a recruiting expert made this recommendation: When you’re being interviewed, you should place your chair at a 45-degree angle to the interviewer’s desk. When you sit down, you should cross your leg toward the interviewer (this indicates strength), and open your jacket (this shows you’re sincere). You should place your elbow on the chair nearest the desk, and lean on it slightly.

When the interviewer asks you questions, don’t give simple yes or no answers. Your answers should be thoughtful, intelligent, and enthusiastic. Do mention your positive points. Of course, don’t be conceited or self-centered, but don’t put yourself down either. Don’t apologize for your weaknesses.

After the interview, evaluate your performance. Decide what you did right, so you can keep doing it in subsequent interviews. If you made mistakes, correct them, so you won’t repeat them.

The ultimate presentation of a portfolio is at a personal interview on a one-to-one level, where particular samples can be commented on or criticized. This is not always possible in today’s high-paced environment, which seeks employment and education nationwide. The slide portfolio, a variation of the formal type, has many advantages in such cases.

UWSP professor of art Richard Schneider remarked, “Slides are shipappable, reproducible, and inex- pensive. The cost and practicality of sending originals is often prohibitive.” Slides make it possible to include a display of large-scale art, such as sculptures, along with more intricate objects such as jewelry and metalwork in a standard size portfolio.

Schneider pointed out that slides are much more representative of color and detail in original work than photographs. Normally, from 4-18 slides are included in a presentation. When sending out an unsolicited portfolio, it is good business to send a postcard or self-addressed mailer along to insure its return. It also shows consideration to the organization you are dealing with,” Schneider added. He currently teaches a class entitled, “Economic Survival Techniques of the Professional Artist,” in which art students compile slide portfolios.

Journalism professor Hyun Kim said most publishing companies definitely want to see samples of your writing. While typed sheets of your work are acceptable, Kim noted, “Published newspaper clippings are more impressive.” A prospective employer can recognize talent and experience when such a portfolio is presented. It is vital to include only your best published work, since samples lower the total quality. Whichever type of portfolio you pursue, there are important guidelines to follow since more than your talents are judged when an interviewer judges it.

Neatness and an exacting manner in the organization of your portfolio indicate to the interviewer that you will pursue these traits in a job situation. It is wise to vary the kinds of samples you are showing. Look for an interesting layout of contrasting designs and colors, creating a balanced whole. Your most inspired piece should be placed at the beginning of a portfolio to capture attention, and an innovative sample to reinforce that first impression should appear at the end. The creation of a stimulating portfolio is paramount in these difficult economic times when competition is fiercer and more sophisticated than ever. A singular, stunning portfolio is your opportunity to separate yourself from the masses and be spotlighted.

Forecasts on the job market—What it can do for you

By Janelle Hunt

Pointers for interview—listening to the interviewer

Hopes of getting a job are on the minds of most students these days. With unemployment and inflation raging rampant in our country, these hopes have often turned to worries. According to Larry Walters of the Career Services Office here on campus, all areas of the job market are hiring. Whether you get a job or not depends on your education, work experience, and flexibility. The options a person has depend on their geographic area. The Wisconsin job market is geared more towards tourism and farm economics, whereas Ohio’s job market is mainly manufacturing. As Walters said, “Comparing the two is like comparing apples and oranges.”

Indicate the area that promises opportunities for the type of job you want, what are some basic things continued on pg. 12
An employment guide that doesn’t do half the job

By Kim Jacobson

Pointer Features Writer

In a time when just a college degree doesn’t guarantee a career, books on how to get a job can prove to be invaluable. However, The Job Hunt, the Biggest Job You’ll Ever Have by Robert B. Nelson isn’t the invaluable guide it promises to be. While the book has a few important things to say about jobs, it lacks any solid facts or statistics that might help. In fact, by its very vague and idealistic psychological approach that says, “get yourself a kick in the ass, be happy,” so what if you get 98 rejections in one week—life is grand. To this, I say, “bullshit.”

Now I overemphasized a bit; 98 isn’t the number quoted in this book. Indeed, Nelson recommends a person keep a record of 50-75 individuals in his or her area to call and ask questions about the company and upcoming opportunities. Nelson has neglected to consider those who come from towns with a population of 50-75. This book operates on the assumption that people who need it come from large metropolitan areas, though it never states this in the preface or anywhere, for that matter.

The chapters are constructed in a questionnaire fashion, and the questions are those most commonly asked by job searchers who are a little “wet behind the ears.” Chapter one concentrates on “Marketing Yourself.” The second question in this chapter is: “Isn’t it hard to get a job with a general degree?” Nelson’s answer to this reasonably valid question is: “If you think so, yes. That attitude will show through in all you do or say. But most organizations are run by people with non-technical degrees and most jobs demand skills that are developed in any educational program.” The latter is a good response, but the first part sounds more like what your mother would say while scolding you. This tone is common throughout the book.

I’ll admit, though I give this book a crummy review, I ordered it from the bookstore because it is good when accompanied by other job search books. In fact, some parts are useful, particularly the section on resumes. It gives sample resumes in the back that illustrate the difference between resumes submitted for social services, arts, and sciences. It also shows the structure and content of a “functional resume,” a resume that is general and brief, a “qualifications brief” (more general than the “functional resume”), a “combination resume” (combining technical and creative skills as a career goal), a “targeted resume” (focusing on a specific job within a company), and a “narrative resume” (done in the form of a letter focusing on expertise and dedication).

This book also serves as a reminder that follow-up “thank-you” letters are greatly appreciated by companies who take time out to talk to you. Basically, my message to those desperately hunting for jobs is, if you haven’t looked into books on job hunting, do so. If you have a collection of job search books, buy this one. It may offer suggestions overlooked in other books as well as just looking “neato” with the hordes of other books in your library. But don’t make The Job Hunt your sole reference book on job searching. You may find yourself turning into a job hunting masochist, sending resumes to places you know will reject you so you can desensitize yourself to such abuses of the ego.

Job market

students can do to prepare themselves for prospective employers? One thing is good grades. Walters said that when an employer looks at resumes and transcripts they definitely look at the grades.

Another thing that definitely makes a difference between being hired or not is previous job experience. Nowadays, even a part-time job is hard to come by. To some it may seem like a losing battle, but it takes a lot of perseverance.

Having been involved in extracurricular activities is also a strong plus once you’re looking for a job. An employer looks at your involvement and can then draw conclusions from it, such as you are ambitious and work well with people.” It's especially helpful if you don't have the needed experience for the job you want because it proves you have at least worked with people. Learning to work with people is a must in almost every job. Walters says that the situation for a graduating student is an unfair one. With all the lay-offs, more people than ever are looking for jobs. As a consequence, employers are being more selective. Many times the person with the experience gets hired before someone fresh out of school. Again, though, much of it depends on what area of the job market you’re applying in.

experience to students prior to graduation. Career Services’ “Dial-A-Job” telephone line is open to students for a fee of $10 a year. Every Friday, at no charge, the Placement Office publishes job vacancy listings for all students. Federal and state civil service information is also available.

Organizational experience may mean jobs

By Scott Carlson
Peeler Features Writer

The pain of finding a job is fast upon many seniors who could have helped themselves by being in a student organization.

Paul Daniels, a Job Service Manager, said employers are trying to find people who are more involved in their prospective career field. "Employers today are looking for just a 40-hour-a-week worker," he said.

Student organizations provide the opportunity to gain experience in more than just your job. Many organizations "are like small businesses," said Scott West, president of SGA. They have to work with budgets and schedules, using authority

employer again and shows them you're really serious about the position.

Mr. Walters had several additional comments on the process of putting together the written documents you'll be presenting to prospective employers. She stressed the importance of giving yourself enough time to do the job right. In other words, don't try to write your resume in one night. She encouraged the job seeker to "consider the impact it has on your future...Give yourself the best possible chance by doing your best work."

If all this sounds like a lot of and leadership skills, be continued.

Lisa Nepper of Sentry personnel department said, "When we look at an application, we look at everything from education to hobbies to outside interests, and student organizations would fall under that." She added that it is a part of any business to find people who are able to best represent them and their interests. If you show strong interest in the job, you'll get an extra step above the others who don't. "We don't just look at experience," she concluded.

Many other organizations on campus help in many interests, job related or not.

"The interests or organizations of the applicant don't have to be job related to help employment," Daniels said. They can help you find employment also through the organization itself. The reason being is that many organizations have many outlets and can get you closer to your career goals, he continued.

An organization such as UAB offers many opportunities such as "public relations, programming, leadership, advising, and practical organization," that can help in many jobs, according to UAB president Mike Bretterman.

In this time of job hunting and tight career markets, a student organization certainly could be an asset that will help you in the future.

Resumes, cont.

employment listings, college placement annuals and resume printing are a few of these services, Walters said.

Being realistic and recognizing the amount of work involved is sometimes overlooked by students, Walters concluded. Walters offered the Career Services Office as a necessary resource for UWSP students.

She finished by saying Career Services will assist in any aspect of student needs in resume preparation.

Pink Floyd's "Final Cut" is haunting tribute

Pink Floyd, The Final Cut
Roger Waters, Mark Holl
Pink Floyd, the satirical master of rock and roll, have finally released a follow-up to 'The Wall.' "The Final Cut" picks up where they left off, and further explores their anti-war, anti-nuke concept.

Roger Waters, having again taken the task of presenting another one of his solo albums under the Pink Floyd disguise. Gone is Richard Wright and his woven string synthesizers, replaced by the real strings of the National Philharmonic Orchestra. The once creative atmosphere of David Gilmour's guitar are reduced to the status of an acoustic. Pink Floyd's drums are replaced on some tracks by session player Andy Neznak. But the result is not a disappointment by any means. It comes across as a finely polished, well produced blend of acoustic piano, strings, and some of the finest vocals ever found on a Pink Floyd album.

"The Final Cut" is a haunting tribute to the late Eric Fletcher Waters, a casualty of World War II, and a father that Waters never knew. "They can polish their medals and sharpen their smiles, and themselves playing games for a while, boom boom, bang bang, lie down you're dead."

Twisted metaphors unravel into a paradox, lashing out at the world's controlling figures: "Brezhnev took Afghanistan, Begin took Beirut, Galibier took the Union Jack, and Maggie over a lunch one day, took a cruiser with all hands, apparently to make him give it back."

Throughout the entire album, Waters' vocals ferment into a chilling essay complete with blood and guts. A jet flies from the right speaker to the left and drops a bomb destined to destroy your woofer. The usual Pink Floyd background sound effects consist of a British radio announcer and a ticking clock. In essence, Waters employs every Pink Floyd gimmick into this production.

"The Final Cut" may take a few listenings to fully understand. It isn't as accessible as "Dark Side of the Moon," but its message is much more important.

For five-hundred Trivia points...

By Barb Harwood
Pointer Features Writer

Outside, pancake size snowflakes smashed on the plate of the last customer. The people were grocery shopping, going to work and giving up on the cold. There was one very small alcove of the world, submerged in volumes of printed matter, very unique individuals were playing trivia. Trivia is the game in which questions like "What company claims they are not just for dancing?" and "Who is the Tyson country ham that was asked over the radio. The station is 90 FM, and the genius behind the extra-trivial factor is Jim Oliva, the "Or."

This year, 25 teams dropped everything to join in the local quiz bowl. I, too, participated, not as a writer out for a good story, but as a kid out for a swell time. And after playing trivia for three years now, I found this contest to be the best yet.

"What's the big deal?" you ask. Well, you might have to look under Monty Hall in a game encyclopedia. "No, no, what's the big attraction?" Oh, you mean the world's fair, they say. "Alpaca. Hey, cut it with the wisecracks. Umm, that would be in the book "Who's Who in Hollywood under Comedians." "I give up." Oh no you don't, if you're playing trivia. Because if you do, then you don't make it to first like 'Network' (1976) or to second place like "Some Darkhorse Team" (300) of which I was a member, or to third, like "Substation" (298). And the key to success is teamwork. It is the team members' devotion to Trivia throughout the year that makes a big difference. As mentioned above, Movies hold more than entertainment, they also provide the number on "Arthur's" race car, and the kind of candy "E.T." was enticed with. Commercials attract as much, if not more, attention than TV programs. And since the "Or" are equal to a glimpse of a UFO. Everyone wonders why he is there, what he is writing down, and if it will have anything at all to do with the usually impossible 500-point question that closes down the contest.

So, you see, Trivia is more than just a weekend extravaganza to many people. On my team, people brought files that had been maintained over a couple of years. Each year, new information is collected and entered in the file. There were also TV Guides, Time, People, and Newsweek dating to 1980, along with every Stevens Point Journal from the past year. Obviously, accommodations at our headquarters had to be arranged for all this info and for the team itself. The furniture was replaced by a huge bookshelf, the refrigerator metamorphosed into a pop machine, and the yard served as a parking lot. The parents moved out for their week-long kindly and bravely leaving their only house in the hands of about 25 trivia fans. On the TV loomed a three-story stereophonic continued on pg. 17 sound system, and a memory bank holding a variety of important phone numbers had been attached to a newly installed phone.

Once "Born to Be Wild," the traditional opening song, was over, the group was ready for question one, hour one. Trivia 1983. From the moment the first question appeared on the scene, a transformation of mind and body took place. For 54 hours, team players dove for copies of magazines and almanacs. They jumped up and almost shouted the answer to a question, only to recall in anger as it suddenly slipped their mind. Some slept Buddha style, or with their face plastered against their body took place. "Rock history" and "Laurel and Hardy" books. In the course of 54 hours, our team saw a pair of "Deeley Boppers" pass from team member to team member. Peanuts, pizzas, home-made chocolate-chip cookies, and five coffee cakes were consumed. And who knows how much caffeine. SET provided a few laughs, especially when they ran the list of teams. Our favorites included "Ed Gein Upholstery Company," "Ed Gein's Supper Club," "Gib Zinda for Mayor," and "I thought it was a Jump of Poop." Then, there were those three tickets to collect for the Trivia Stone, which owns a point value of 300. At approximately 4:30 Sunday morning, I and a team member followed the flow of traffic to one of these tickets. I wondered how many parents knew their kids were out late riding, with flashlights swinging, at this hour. I figured most were not aware of the fact, and were glad, because those kids were enjoying the time of their lives. And that is what Trivia comes down to. I associate it with Christmas as it is looked forward to all year, preparations are made, and during the weekend you see people you have not seen since the last contest. And when it was over, instead of being tired of trivial information, people geared up for next year, thinking of even better books to buy and ideas for improved note taking.

For "Some Darkhorse Team," the logging of information all year paid off, as we won our second place standing and a trip to the 90 PM Trivia Headquarters to continued on pg. 27

Too much veneer, not enough depth

Cranston’s environmental policy looks promising, but...

By Todd Hitlckish
Environmental Editor

Although not officially part of Earth Week, Senator Alan Cranston will bring his environmental message to UWSP as the first presidential candidate for 1984 to appear in Stevens Point. Cranston will present an environmental address in Berg Gym on Monday at 10 a.m.

The California Senator is one of a field of Democratic senators who have announced or intend to announce their candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination for 1984. Cranston’s visit is part of a two-day swing through the state.

Cranston is very critical of the Reagan administration’s environmental positions. This is very evident in an early draft of Cranston’s environmental position paper entitled “Senator Alan Cranston: The Environment.” Cranston, and everybody else in the country except the chemical industry, is behind the chemical industry is behind the senator殚’s environmental stance on pollution.

Cranston emphasizes that the presidential leadership role in creating environmental policy has not been used by Reagan for the benefit of the environment. Perhaps the best example cited by Cranston is regarding management of Bureau of Land Management lands. Cranston says that the Reagan administration is preventing multiple use land planning under the Federal Lands Management and Policy Act “because of lack of funds and low priority.” The void is filled by the development of mineral leasing, Secretary of Interior James Watt, “The process needs to be reversed,” proclaims Cranston. “Planning must precede allocations for development.”

The Clean Air Act should be extended, according to Cranston, “to clean up dirty air and stop deterioration of air that is still clean.” Likewise for the Endangered Species Act, which Cranston indicates contains “legal responsibilities to list species and preserve habitat.”

Enjoying more specifics behind the criticisms that perhaps any other aspect of the statement, Cranston rails at Reagan for cutting the U.S. contribution to the United Nations Earthwatch Program by 61 percent this budget year. “The U.S. should, at a minimum, maintain the UNEP contribution level of the past fiscal year.”

Extensions of current programs

Senator Cranston emphasizes that he would seek to enforce the law of many current pieces of legislation which the Reagan administration has gone soft on. The 1964 Wilderness Act temporary restrictions on mineral leasing which ended next January need to be permanently ended, according to Cranston. Similarly, Cranston feels that the Alaskan Lands Act “needs to be funded and properly implemented to maintain a true balance between resource development and resource development.”

The 1980 Memo of Understanding between the U.S. and Canada regarding acid rain must be enforced, indicating that the area’s air has steadily reduced its own emissions,” said Cranston. This points to the need for the U.S. to do likewise.

Cranston would seek to use the United Nations World Bank, the Agency for International Development, and the Peace Corps to pursue and continue international cooperation and assistance for environmental policies.

Innovative proposals

One of the most innovative proposals, relatively speaking, by Cranston is his proposal to cooperate with the Soviet Union. A good example of this is in Cranston’s reference to the UNEP that “the U.S. should also explore every avenue of cooperation with the Soviet Union.” This pledge highlights Cranston’s strong emphasis on international assistance regarding environmental policy. In relation, Cranston, as part of his call for a new definition of national security which “must consider ecological security,” says that the State Department, the National Security Council, and the CIA “should conduct ongoing analyses of strategic environmental trends worldwide.”

This program for international assistance on environmental issues is what Cranston calls his “foreign policy for the environment.” Ambassadors for Global Environment and Human Resources would be appointed to “be the senior U.S. spokesperson...for environmental considerations between the U.S. and other countries.”

Senator Cranston would also lead the Task Force on Technology and the Environment.

holes to fill

Although Senator Cranston’s environmental program looks good, it is also dominated by shallowness. For example, Cranston discusses the Task Force on Technology and the Environment only in regard to striking up private-public cooperation for generating “power of government (which have) dwindled.” Nowhere is there a discussion of technology. The discussion is purely economic. As a matter of fact, the word technology is only mentioned in this section in the title of the task force.

This discussion of money leads to a discussion of many important topics which Cranston gives very little attention.

Cranston does not talk of desiring a transfer of funding from the areas which have taken the “fossil fuels” to environmental programs which could use these funds.

—Nuclear power is given scant attention. The only nuclear perspective Cranston alludes to is the threat of nuclear waste. Located under the heading of “Toxic and hazardous substances”, Cranston, of nuclear waste, says, “We need additional research on just how great a threat they pose.” —Renewable energy is not even mentioned by Senator Cranston in his environmental statement. One would assume that he has ideas in this area. Those ideas should at least be mentioned in this statement.

While hinting at it, Senator Cranston never actually comes out and criticizes business for compromising environmental quality for profits. Cranston writes on page one that the Reagan administration is “obsessed with short-term economic gain regardless of the effect on long-term survival.” However, the Reagan administration does not receive the economic gain (or do they?). There —although Cranston discusses the need for baseline studies regarding enforcement of the Clean Air Act, he fails to mention it regarding the need to compile baseline data for measuring leaking from nuclear power plants and emissions continued p. 21

Hamsterstroms address Wildlife Conclave

By Sheldon Cohen
Environmental Writer

On April 8, Doctors Fred and Fran Hammerstrom, world renowned ornithologists from Plainfield, Wisconsin, welcomed this year’s wildlife conclave students to Wisconsin with their unique style of wit combined with wisdom that they have accumulated during the 36 years of experience in the field of wildlife management.

The Hammerstroms began their studies in the life sciences before wildlife management even existed. They were both graduate students under Aldo Leopold (father of wildlife management in this country) at Madison in the 1930s working on the ecology of the prairie chickens in the Buena Vista Marsh area just south of Madison. After their graduate school, they worked for many years with the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources. Their dedication and expertise on species such as prairie chickens, marsh hawks and kestrels has won them many awards and widespread recognition.

Although both of their talks on Friday night were short in length, the ideas they conveyed were very timely and pertinent to the students who will be looking for employment in the wildlife management field.

Frederick Hammerstrom stressed how valuable training in the life sciences can be in dealing with the many contemporary problems we face in managing and increasing human population with a finite resource base. This training includes an essential understanding of the complex interactions of biotic and abiotic systems which must be taken into account when considering problems such as toxic and radioactive waste disposal and population control. “Therefore, to other problems mean nothing,” said Dr. Hammerstrom, “unless we stop our population growth right now.”

Economic democracy in the global environment

Dr. Barry Commenor, professor of biology, author, lecturer, and participating presidential candidate in 1980, will be speaking on campus this Monday evening. To provide you with some background on Dr. Commenor, the Magazine environmental editor Todd Hotchkiss talked with Dr. Commenor on the telephone on Monday morning.

Although we did not discuss whether Commenor would be the presidential candidate for the Citizens' Party in 1984, it is very evident by Commenor's answers that he is particularly democratic in his terms. This may be indicative of what Commenor will do in the future.

TH: What do you regard as the most serious environment facing the world today?

BC: The danger of nuclear war, obviously, is an environmental problem to end all environmental problems.

TH: If you had won the 1980 presidential election, how would you address this problem?

BC: I think the basic question is this: since World War II the Soviet Union and the United States have essentially been at war. They have fought the war by proxy, by supporting one side or the other in wars all over the world: in Vietnam, in Korea, in Latin America, in Africa. I think the basic problem the world faces is this: as long as the United States and the Soviet Union continue we will be in a constant danger of a nuclear war. The question I would propose is that we ask ourselves very bluntly: Why do we think we can coexist with the Soviet Union? I think it is a real time to have a treaty of peace. The United States and the Soviet Union have enormous amounts of money for rebuilding the world economy, not only here but in the Third World. I think that's where we're heading. We've got to begin to confront this basic question of

TH: When the Soviet Union and the United States have sent economic, not military support into Third World countries, there have been problems in these foreign aid programs. What kind of foreign aid programs would you advocate?

BC: In the first place, both sides should be sending so much military support into Third World countries as to generate the conflicts that make it impossible to get a good program for economic development going. The kind of foreign aid that Third World countries need first is to stop shipments of arms. Second, to work with the Third World countries to find out what they need, to coordinate with what the U.S. corporations, or the Soviet Union for that matter.

For example, I've seen over and over again the statement made that the reason Third World countries can't build nuclear power plants is because the industry isn't getting enough domestic orders. The same reason the Third World can't build nuclear power plants in France. In other words, we are using Third World countries to solve our own problems, which, incidentally, do not include the use of nuclear power.

TH: What about the argument that we can't trust the Russians? How would you convince people that we can trust the Russians?

BC: What you have to begin to talk about is this: What are the Russians up to? Are they out to conquer the world? If so, I think we can just forget it, because just as we are not going to persuade clear nuclear weapons. There would be no way of avoiding a world holocaust. If you assume that the Russians are out to conquer the world, and they have nuclear weapons, I don't see any way of dealing with them. So you've got to ask what they really want.

I think there are alternative hypotheses which can be looked at. For example, if you examine Soviet aggression it's all on their borders. And I know from my own experience. I was in Prague just before the Soviet invasion, that what was about was the fear on the part of the Kremlin that democratic reforms in Czechoslovakia might spread to the Soviet Union. In other words, I think that what the Soviet aggression reflects is an attempt to solve an internal problem. That internal problem is a lack of democracy of the internal problem within the Soviet Union, particularly democratic control of their economy. But that's an internal problem.

Incidentally, we have the same internal problem. We, too, don't have democratic

TH: While we are on the topic of trusting the Russians and fighting a global war. Have you seen any proof that the Russians are supplying arms to the rebels in El Salvador?

BC: No, but it's natural. Those rebels are getting their arms from somewhere, and I think they are going to get them from those countries that produce goods in whatever they want, consistent with the arms. What has happened over the years is that the chemical companies are now the ones who are going to be the farmers to use a whole range of new types of chemicals as pesticides and fertilizers. Without taking into account, really, the impact on society as a whole through the use of these chemicals.

TH: What happens then is that when problems arise, ten or twenty years down the line, then the corporations and to some extent by the farmers, corporation control is going to be very serious problem that hounds us further on down the line.

Dr. Barry Commenor

TH: What kind of mechanisms would you use or do you advocate?

BC: Take for example, a typical question for Wisconsin. There's a group of farmers who have been using DDT in Wisconsin, where an automobile corporation or a steel corporation who has been using DDT in a large number of dairies. This kind of production methods are to be used, so that we can literally change the character of the very serious problem that hounds us further on down the line.

TH: What kind of statement made that the reason the Soviet Union that is threaten

BC: In Portage County, around Stevens Point, we are experiencing a ground water problem by pollution of agricultural pesticides in the ground water. Aldicarb is one of these and disulfoton is another. These are being discussed in the State Legislature regarding compensation for victims and how to raise the money for the compensation include using general tax revenues. What I would say is this: there's an inconsistenc

TH: Some people would call that argument socialism, that the government is going to buy up the companies that are the most guilty. What is your response to that charge?

BC: Well, I respond to that charge by being very clear about what I mean by socialism. Where is it written in gold that the people are going to own the companies that are the most guilty? What I am saying is that the basic issues of the environment and the economy of the world are not going to be resolved by mistakes made in what I would call the governance of the Third World. I think it's time we open support to the Pope in his encyclical, so it's not a terribly radical thing.

Pointers chalk up four wins

By Julie Denker
Pointers Sportswriter

The week ended Friday that UWSP, the 1982 WWIAC softball champion, is the team to beat in the 1983 season. UWSP finished last season with a 15-4 record in its second year as a varsity sport and has a 4-4 season record presently.

The Pointers started the season with a bang as they beat UW-Oshkosh 7-1 and 3-3 in a doubleheader on April 8. UWSP came out strong out of the gate but found their bats when outfielder Linda Butzen got a double to lead off the fourth inning. She later scored on a ground out.

Point scored twice in the sixth and fourth times in the seventh to lengthen their lead.

Sue Schweb and Butzen led the 11-hit Pointer attack with three hits each while Cari Gerlach and Madonna Golla each scored two.

Pitcher Sue Murphy was overpowering as she limited UW-O to just four hits, while striking out three and walking only one.

The Pointers had no problems in the second game despite the 3-1 Titan lead after the first inning. UWSP wasted no time regaining the lead as they scored three times in the second, once in the third, five times in the fourth, then led down the win with three in the fifth.

Madonna Golla led the way in the 12-hit attack with three hits. Sue Schweb added two hits which produced three runs and Brenda Lemke had a triple which also brought home three runs.

Diane McCarthy pitched a steady game for the Pointers as she allowed 10 hits and two walks while striking out two Titan batters. She went the distance to earn the win.

On Monday April 11, the Pointers again found themselves in a doubleheader against conference opponent UW-River Falls. UWSP left no doubt why they are the team to beat as they came away with 6-1 and 3-2 victories.

In the first game, junior Sue Murphy had a no-hitter for six and one-third innings. Overall, she only allowed two hits while fanning four batters and permitting no walks.

The bats were again booming as sophomore Brenda Lemke had five RBI's including a triple and a home run.

In the second game of the day Point was again the winner by a score of 5-2.

Madonna Golla led off the first inning with a single and scored on Dee Christoffer son's sacrifice. There was a bit of a drought then as UWSP did not score until the fifth inning, building up their lead 2-0. UWSP tied the score in the sixth inning but in the top of the seventh Golla led off with a walk and stole second. Golla moved to third on another Christoffer son sacrifice and scored the winning run on a wild pitch.

Diane McCarthy pitched a solid game allowing four hits in six innings. Sue Murphy came in relief in the seventh inning to insure the win for UWSP.

Point coach Nancy Page commented on the doubleheader sweeps.

"We're off to a really good start. People are batting well and we're clutch hitting when we need it."

"We have a real veteran team this year. Five of the infielders have started all three years and they all have a lot of experience working together. Overall it is very much a team effort for us."

The Pointers travel to the Oshkosh Invitational this weekend.

Rites of Writing explores sports reporting

By Tamas Houlihan
Pointers Sportswriter

"In the Writing: Gathering Information, Satisfying Readers," was the topic for a session at the Rites of Writing conferences held at UWSP on March 30.

The panel included the UWSP sports information director Steve Swan, Pointer Magazine sports editor Mary-Margaret Vogel, Stevens Point Journal sports reporter Jim Krueger, and Stevens Point Journal sports editor Don Friday. Communications-journalism professor Dan Houlihan and another Journal reporter Ron Ankley, were respondents. English professor Richard Dukert served as chairman.

Each of the panelists gave a brief summary of his/her responsibilities and other important aspects of the job.

Steve Swan began by pointing out that responsibility is public relations, not journalism. He writes reports on the various athletic teams as well as doing the write-ups for specific events. He also writes smaller, home-town news releases, detailing the exploits of a specific athlete and sending it to his home town. Steve is also responsible for finding and maintaining statistical data. Other public relations aspects of his job include making up programs and brochures to be sold and/or distributed before an athletic event. He also writes a few feature stories on prominent athletes at the university. Steve summed up his responsibilities by saying "my job is to promote the positive aspects of athletes and sports at UWSP."

Mary-Margaret Vogel said her main responsibility is to cover the athletic events of the university in an objective and fair manner. Her staff consists of three writers who are given weekly assignments, usually covering one event each. Some of the events that are unable to be covered, such as many of the teams' away contests, are reported through the sports information director's office which makes it possible for all the teams to receive coverage of every event. The Pointer Magazine's sports section also often includes feature stories on teams or individual athletes, as well as articles on outside events or events can be lauded or criticized accordingly. Mary-Margaret said she likes to positively promote the teams and individuals, thus the successful ones receive more attention and copy space.

However, her job requires her to be objective, so she is required to report all sports news, including that which is unfavorable. Mary-Margaret also said she is trying to move, away from strictly informative reporting and get into more features and special reports that are outside the realm of a single competitive event.

Jim Krueger said his major function is to report on the local high school teams. He attends many high school sporting events and takes notes and statistics as well as getting comments from the coaches involved. Because of the large number of teams and events, he depends a great deal on the coaches to fill out and send in forms that give results, statistics and comments, as well as all other pertinent information. Jim then uses the forms to write articles about the events. His stories are often on the front page of the Stevens Point Journal because many readers are continued on pg. 23

Gehling honored

SID — Bonnie Gehling, women's basketball coach at UWSP has been named the Basketball Coach of the Year in the Wisconsin Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Conference in a vote of her peers.

Gehling, in her sixth year at UWSP, led her Pointer team to a 7-1 regular season record in the WWIAC which tied for first place in the conference. Her team then finished second in the conference tournament to UW-La Crosse.

Gehling rallied her team from 6-4 and 4-7 records in the early season to a final record of 14-10 for 1983-84. Included in the record is a second place finish in the Stevens Point Community Classic.

In her six years as the mentor of the Pointers, Gehling has compiled an overall record of 65-56. She has an overall career record of 120-64.

While coaching at Green Bay West High School, Gehling was named the conference coach of the year in 1976 and 1977 and was picked as the Sportswoman of the Year in Green Bay in 1976. Gehling, a Pembine native, is a 1976 graduate of UW-La Crosse and received her master of arts degree from Ohio State University in 1975.

Gehling is the second UWSP woman to earn the Coach of the Year designation in 1982-83. Earlier, Carie Huettig was picked for the honor in women's swimming.
Keith Kulas commits to UWSP

SID — Keith Kulas, a standout basketball player from Medford High School, is the first announced recruit for Dick Bennett's UWSP basketball team.

Kulas was the driving force behind a Medford team which tied for second in the Lumberjack Conference, advanced to the sectional finals before losing to Wisconsin Rapids Lincoln and had a season record of 13-9.

Kulas, a 6-foot-6, 185 pounder, earned first team All-Lumberjack Conference and Channel 7 All-Stars honors along with honorable mention All-State recognition from the Associated Press.

This past season he averaged 17.9 points and 14.0 rebounds per game while converting 44 percent of his field goals and 68 percent of his free throws. He had a season high of 28 points against both Minocqua Lakeland and Wausau East and also pulled down a high of 16 rebounds in a number of games. One of his efforts in the latter category came in the regional tournament against Chippewa Falls.

Kulas was a four-year member of the varsity at Medford and was a three-year starter. In his prep career he scored 956 points and pulled down 700 rebounds.

In addition to his basketball prowess, Kulas also excels in the classroom where he has a composite grade point average of 3.82 and is ranked 10th in a class of 216.

Keith is the last of three brothers who have been prep standouts at Medford High School. Older brother Kevin played at UWSP from 1977-81, where he is the school's all-time assist leader, and other brother Kirby plays at UW-Green Bay.

Bennett made it known that he is very pleased to have Kulas attending UWSP and joining his program.

"We are delighted to have Keith Kulas as a Pointer. He has size, intelligence and skills. He has the ability to play either of our baseline positions and with his dedication he will progress rapidly."

"I saw Keith play a number of times and his unselfish play really impressed me. He, like his brother Kevin, only knows one way to play, and that is all out."

"I am tickled to have another Kulas in the program."

Kulas said that Bennett and the successful program he has built at UWSP were major reasons for his decision on the school.

"I wanted to play in a winning program where I could fit in and I felt that the program at Stevens Point was conducive to my style of play."

"I have great respect for Coach Bennett as a coach and person. I was also very aware of the success and pleasure that my brother Kevin had playing at Point and that also played a role in my decision."

interested in the local athletic teams.

Don Friday is in his 25th year as sports editor of the Journal. He and his staff cover all sports activities of any nature, from ball sports to hunting and fishing.

Because the newspaper is small to medium in size, local events are given precedence, followed by the state and national sports news. Don personally covers the university activities. He claims that his job is to report and to inform, not to promote or entertain. He said he must always try to be objective.

His job entails a lot of editing as well as gathering and reporting sports news. He said the hours are long and irregular including much evening work, but that it is very rewarding. "In sports writing and reporting, there's always a new challenge," he concluded.

Rugby Club wins over Stout

The Stevens Point Rugby Club defeated Stout 33-6 here this weekend. Pat Hajaki led Point by scoring 3 tries. Also scoring for Point were Dennis Rue, Tom Roof, Paul Champ and Jeff Woods. Stevens Point's record stands at 1-0-1.

In the B-side match, Point won 6-3. Brad Bene scored for the winning margin.

loosely, began printing the answers to our tremendous Trivia contest some years ago, we began to search for a way to establish some security. We knew that Oliva is a weak bugger who can’t hold his liquor, so we didn’t even bother to try to fix that. What we did do instead was to construct a genuine Jim Oliva clone, that looked, talked, and smelled the same as our own Trivia Ox. The clone was then programmed with false answers and sent out into the great bars of Stevens Point to find your media types. So, what you ended up with was hundreds of incorrect answers that your readers, all three of them, depended upon. The prestige of your “newspaper” has suffered, and will in the future, since we lock up the real Oliva every year before the contest, and send out our clone. Quite Trivial, isn’t it though!!!

Oliva was not Oliva

To the Pointer GAZINE,

And you guys thought you were really cute beating the answers for Trivia ’83 out of Jim Oliva!!! We sure fooled you this year!!! After your magazine, and I use the term International Club is and what its purposes are. According to Webster, the word international means “of, or for by people of various nations.” The word foreign means “from another country.” Foreign students who are referred to as “international” would mean that he-she must be born in two different countries. Actually, they are from only one country, studying here. Therefore, they are foreign students, not international students.

The International Club is perceived as being strictly for foreign students. This is wrong. It is also for American students. Referring back to Webster again, “international” means “for uses of all nations and concerned with relations between nations.” America is just like any other nation such as Malaysia, Turkey, Cameroon or Spain. Seeing that Americans are the host of the foreign students, they should want to be a part of the club to take advantage of the many different cultures to be learned about. We Americans are perceived as being somewhat arrogant because we know so little about other countries besides our own. Also, I think that becoming a member would help make community relations a lot better. The sole purpose of the club is to promote international awareness and to provide an opportunity for all to grow in knowledge of other cultures as well as their own. I must admit that American students may feel threatened at first, because they are a minority for a change, but they will be immediately accepted and involved with the people and activities. It is the high involvement that they will begin to develop an understanding and appreciation of others.

I am a senior and I just learned the difference between foreign and international. As an American member, I have learned so much about people from other countries through this club that I can’t begin to explain them. The most important thing I learned was that we are all alike. I hope other American students take advantage of this opportunity, before it is too late, to become a member of the International Club to experience the things I have experienced.

PERSONAL: Ingrid Walker: John might not be here next season, so you better call him up and convince him to stay. 341-882. This has been a public service from your local doe.

PERSONAL: F.S. No. 1.: "Augburger...One of the most highly regarded among 'up and comers'" —Vogue Magazine.

PERSONAL: To all the Wisconsin girls: Wish me! Love, you

PERSONAL: Happy birthday to you! I love you. You are my personal. Don't do spend my money, you do spend it on me. J.B.

PERSONAL: Dear Brat: Happy Birthday to you! It your hair grows long too. I love you more than anything. And I hope you do. Carolyn.

PERSONAL: Robin 4S Burroughs: This is it—you very own personal. So, destinice go to that great Deb dining room in the sky, huh? And so—you're not losing your mind, you do have a roommate even if I do spend most of my time in the hallway, the phone booth or watching M-V. You're the only one I know who is fascinated by wood chips. One more thing—Who's "Watching"? Drive me nuts or what! Your groovy roomies, ugly.

PERSONAL: Rocky, Lips are coming! Let's do it again and again and again...Janet.

PERSONAL: Eddie, a toast to you! I make a fantastic meatloaf—I guess I picked a winner—Frankie.

PERSONAL: Hey Dr. Scott, where's your neck? Where's your 1+4+6+11 back??

PERSONAL: We're happy birthday to you! I hope you make your birthday so "bearingly" special. I love you. Amaryllis.

PERSONAL: Ron, Happy Birthday to you! I hope your hair grows long too. I love you more than anything. And I hope you do. Carolyn.
