We deserve a break today!

This is not my favorite time of year. I've got nothing against fall, Halloween, or even hunting season. I just hate mid-terms. I don't think anyone, student or faculty, actually enjoys them. Midterms are, however, a fact of college life and must be endured.

Four years ago, mid-terms weren't as bad as they had been previously. In 1981, the Faculty Senate approved an academic calendar containing a fall break which gave UWSP students, faculty and staff the last Thursday and Friday in October off. The break was designed to give students a physical and mental break from the strain of college.

In 1983, two years after its adoption, the fall break was done away with. According to Professor Coralie Dietrich who served on the Calendar Subcommittee in 1983, the fall break was dropped for a number of reasons.

"There were faculty and student complaints about the spacing of the breaks. In order to meet with the Board of Regents policy, we must schedule at least 16 hours of class time per credit. To meet this standard and also have a fall break, we had to go longer at Christmas. Many students and faculty objected to this."

"There were also disciplinary problems," said Dietrich. "It seemed fall break gave students more energy to tear the place up."

More energy? Of course there was more energy!

Depending on when mid-terms were held, students were able to relax, both physically and mentally away from the tensions of classes during fall breaks. In addition to academics, fall break provided a change of scene. A chance for faculty and students to unwind. Something to look forward to. A time to pull things together so the remainder of the semester could be faced with a fresher perspective.

Tom Jensen, a physician's assistant at Health Center agrees.

"Fall break is a good idea. It breaks up the semester. As both a student and a staff member, I looked forward to fall break. It's a psychologically long span between Labor Day and Thanksgiving. People need a break. At the end of a semester, you see a lot of sickness, much of it the result of stress. Finals are a stressful time of year. Physical and mental rest relieves tension. In that respect, fall break is medically, as well as psychologically healthy."

Health Center's Associate Director Dr. John Beninis also advocated a fall break.

"If your mind needs a vacation, so does your body. The two are interdependent. Everybody needs a breather. After a restful vacation, faculty and students come back stronger. The rest builds up the immune system which allows the body to resist disease more effectively," said Betinis.

Is it better to have a fall break and run later in December? Or is it better to run straight through the semester without a break until Thanksgiving?

Other Wisconsin schools are still holding fall breaks. With the high priority placed on wellness here at UWSP, it seems only logical that a stress relieving fall break should be incorporated.

As they stand now, the plans for the 1986 and 1987 academic calendars do not provide for a fall break.

Students — Do you need a chance to unwind after mid-terms? Or do you need a chance to study for mid-terms coming up?

Faculty members — Do you need time to grade or prepare your mid-terms?

Wouldn't you all rather be socializing with your family and friends than sitting around reading the Pointer?

Make your feelings known to Faculty Senate and Student Government representatives. After all, everybody needs a break!

Dreyfus to keynote mental health forum Nov. 1

Former Governor Lee Sherman Dreyfus will be the keynote speaker for the 27th annual statewide mental health institute and public forum to be held on Thursday and Friday, Nov. 1 and 2, at the Stevens Point Holiday Inn.

"What in the World is Going On?" is the theme of the event, co-sponsored by the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point, the Mental Health Association in Wisconsin and the Portage County Chapter of the Mental Health Association.

Following Dreyfus' address from 9:30 to 10:15 a.m. on Thursday, four workshop leaders will give an overview of current issues concerning family structures, children, the elderly and society in general. The speakers are: Myrvin Christopherson, chairman of the UW-SP

Division of Communication; Jeanette Nelson, program coordinator for elderly services, State Office of Mental Health; Sharon Price, president of the National Council on Family Relations; and Samuel D. Stellman, of the Criminal Justice Institute, UW-Extension.

The concurrent sessions from 11:15 a.m. to 12:15 p.m. on Thursday include:

"Our Society: What Makes the World Turn? A Communicator's Look at People and Institutions," by Christopherson;

"Our Elderly: What Happened to 'Through the Woods to Grandmother's House We Go'?" by Nelson;

"Our Families: Why Fractured Families?" by Price;

"Our Children: Are They Becoming a Neglected Species?" by Stellman.

In the afternoon on Thursday, current programming in response to these issues will be explored. The sessions from 1:30 to 3 p.m. will include:

"Our Society—Grassroots Programs and Support, a Potpourri of Ideas," by Paul Bauck, director of community services, Marshfield Medical Foundation;

"How Families Fracture Themselves—And What to do About It," by Elizabeth Davis, therapist, Portage County Community Human Services;

"Sexually Assertive Behavior Training," by Richard Ironsides, crime prevention officer, Wisconsin Rapids;

"The Washington County Elder Peer Counseling Program," by Gail Johnson, family education and treatment program coordinator, Washington County Mental Health Center, and Linda Olson, director of the Office on Aging in Washington County.

Concurrent sessions from 3:15 to 4:45 p.m. will be:

"Home Sweet HomeShare," by June Cichowitz, program director of HomeShare, Madison;

"The Blended Family in Contemporary Society—Or If at First You Don't Succeed, Try, Try Again," by Elfriede Massier, UW-SP professor of sociology;

"Community Organizing for Social Good," by Karl Pnasek, director of CAP Services, Stevens Point;

"Protective Behaviors/Anti-Victim Training for Children and Ourselves," by Peg Flannery West, director of Protective Behaviors Inc., Madison.

An evening awards dinner and entertainment from 7 to 9 p.m. will feature a performance by Suzuki Talent Education students and a state association auction.

On Friday, Nov. 2, the theme of the workshop will be "Building a Better Mental Health Association." The sessions will include:

"Getting the Word Out About the Mental Health Association," by Marilyn Coleman, public information director, State Association, and Sarah Clanton, executive director, Portage County Chapter;

"The ABC's of Advocating at the Local Level," by Gregory G. Garski, State Office of Mental Health, and Ann Wondergem, president, Sheboygan County Chapter;

"Targeting Programs for Your Community," by a panel. The concurrent offerings from 9:45 to 10:45 a.m. will be:

"Fund Raising—Money Makes the World Go Round," by Ann Rushech, executive director, Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Portage County;

"The Volunteer Force—Translating Goals Into Action," by Mary Beth Torgeson-Bos, executive director, United Way of Portage County;

"Board of Directors—Rubber Stamping or Active Participation," by Judy Powers, economic development and training coordinator, Lakeshore Technical Institute, Cleveland, Wis.

The state Mental Health Association's delegate assembly will be held from 10:45 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., followed by lunch and a talk by C.Y. Allen, UW-SP professor of communication, on "Leadership: Translating Your Vision Into Reality."

Registration and further information are available through the Office of Continuing Education and Outreach, 103 Old Main, UW-SP. Fees for the full conference are $25 for the public; $10 for senior citizens; and $8 for students.

Lower tuition fees were made possible through partial funding by the United Way of Portage County.

Soprano Shelton to chime Oct. 31

Soprano Lucy Shelton will perform at 8 p.m., Wednesday, October 31, in Michelsen Hall at the UWSP.

The performance is sponsored by the Arts and Lectures Fine Arts Series. Tickets are on sale at the Arts and Lectures box office, Fine Arts Center.

The only artist to be twice honored with the Naumburg Competition Award, once with the Jubal Trio and again as a soloist, she has been described by Peter G. Davis of the New York Times as a "superior recitalist with a purity of tone, a verbal clarity, and a depth of emotion."

Shelton has been heard in recital at Alice Tully Hall, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Library of Congress and university campuses throughout the nation. She has made appearances with the Buffalo Philharmonic, the Los Angeles and St. Paul Chamber Orchestras, the National, Houston, Denver, Baltimore and St. Louis Symphonies. In the spring of 1984, she made her London recital debut and will be performing during the 1984-85 season at Carnegie Hall in New York.

In addition to recordings on the Vox, Vanguard, Grenadilla, Sonory, and Smithsonian Institution labels, Shelton has recently finished three albums of French, Gypsy and Irish songs for Nonesuch Records.

After receiving her master's degree in voice at the New England Conservatory, Shelton taught at the Eastman School of Music until her touring schedule became too busy.

The soprano will conduct a master class at 3 p.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 30, at Michelsen Hall. The class will be open to the public free of charge.

Reknowned organist Curley here

Carlo Curley, who has been described by critics as the "Pavarotti of the organ," will perform at 8 p.m., Saturday, Oct. 27 at the Sentry Theater. The performance is sponsored by the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point Arts and Lectures Concert Series.

Tickets go on sale Monday, Oct. 15 in the Arts and Lectures box office, Fine Arts Center.

A North Carolina native, the 31-year-old Curley is one of only a few artists in the world who concertizes exclusively unsupported by a teaching or church position. His mission is to establish the organ at the forefront of musical instruments, "even if this takes the rest of my life," he proclaims.

Since 1971, he has performed hundreds of inaugural concerts on new organs in concert halls, churches and cathedrals. In 1982, he played before a capacity audience of two thousand at St. David's Hall, Cardiff, Wales. He opened the Greater London Council Royal Festival Hall organ series in London in 1983 marking his third year; also where he broke tradition in 1980 by playing the first full-length evening organ concert ever.

In the U.S., he has performed at Carnegie Hall, the Kennedy Center, and the White House. He has appeared on television in Great Britain, Europe and Japan and on public radio in England, Canada and the U.S.

Curley began training at age four with his grandmother, a one-time professor of piano at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. In his early teens, he went on to study at the North Carolina School of the Arts on full scholarship. Subsequent teachers included Americans Virgil Fox, Arthur Poister and Robert Elmore; and one of Britain's foremost organists, Sir George Thalben-Ball. At 16, Curley began professional concertizing while organist at Druid Hills Baptist Church in Atlanta, Ga. At 17, he served as artist-in-residence at Fountain Street Church in Grand Rapids, Mich. By age 18, he was appointed organist and choirmaster at Philadelphia's Girard College, where he supervised the restoration of the 100-stop Skinner organ.

Since 1979, Curley has been associated with the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., performing solos, concerts and coaching students.

A 1979 Chalfont recording won him "Stereo Review" magazine's "Best of the Month." He now records exclusively for RCA Red Seal, including an album of French organ music performed on the great organ of the Royal Albert Hall; a recording at the Alexandra Palace on his Allen Digital Computer instrument; and two digital Bach albums played on a new Frobenius pipe organ at Vengede Church, Copenhagen. He also is heavily involved in organ design and construction, including the restoration of historic American instruments.

Curley was invited to play a Virgil Fox Memorial Concert on the Cavaille-Coll organ at Notre Dame in Paris and to play another Fox memorial in New York City this year. In 1985, he will perform the Winston Churchill Memorial Concert at Blenheim Palace.

He travels with his Allen digital organ, which a critic from the San Francisco Chronicle calls, "a miracle, a beautiful one, for this instrument, without so much as one organ pipe, is worthy of a cathedral. It's said that this organ approximates the size and sound of a conventional, 114-rank pipe organ requiring 6,000 individual pipes. . . Curley plays the instrument majestically."

Raasch still missing

Janet Raasch, the 20-year-old sophomore who disappeared from Watson Hall on Thursday, October 11, has still not been located according to Protective Services.

Raasch's roommate last saw her at approximately 8 p.m. on the day of her disappearance. An acquaintance reported seeing her walking south by Shopko carrying what looked like a laundry bag. According to Stevens Point Police, Raasch was last seen in a laundromat in Marshfield on Monday, October 15.

Photos, letters and teletypes have been sent to law enforcement agencies around Central Wisconsin in an effort to locate Raasch. Daily contact with Raasch's family and friends has been established.

Raasch is 5'1" and 110 pounds with long blond hair. Persons with any information concerning her whereabouts should contact the Stevens Point Police Department immediately.

To the Pointer,

On October 25 one year ago, the United States launched an invasion of the tiny Caribbean island of Grenada. Much of the fog surrounding that attack, created by a press blackout in the first days of the invasion, remains but we must take a closer look at the Reagan administration's given reasons for the attack and the reality.

The proclaimed "first concern" of the president was the safety of American citizens on the island in the midst of a government overthrow. Some 1,000 Americans were in Grenada; 700 of these were medical students at St. George's University. Some of the students were afraid of being taken hostage, "although the Grenadians and Cubans had never made a move to harm them." (Time, Nov. 7, 1983). Further, the new Grenadian government assured university and embassy officials that "the Americans on the island were in no danger and would be permitted to leave if they wished." (Time). They went to great lengths to prove their good will by providing water and food supplies and permitting people to move about during the instated 24-hour curfew. Not only is there no evidence of danger to the Americans in Grenada (except from the fighting brought on by the U.S. invasion), but there is all evidence that an invasion was not necessary. The Americans could have evacuated peacefully. Both Canada and Great Britain arranged for commercial planes to evacuate their citizens.

Our government's second main reason for the invasion was the request by the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS) to participate in a "regional military action." The OECS consists of Grenada and six other neighboring island countries. The pact they have provides for defense against "external aggression" and only by unanimous vote. The U.S. invasion and the request by OECS was in clear violation of this treaty since Grenada could not be considered an external aggressor, but was a member of that alliance and only four of the seven countries voted to pass the request.

The final main objective of the U.S. was to rid Grenada of its "evil" Cuban influence. The evidence listed by the administration included a major airport being built by Cubans and supposedly intended for military use, a large number of Cuban military men disguised as construction workers, and warehouses full of sophisticated weapons. However, none of these claims has been substantiated.

The airport under construction was first proposed by the British, was being largely financed by them and had been designed by Canadians. It was to be used to serve the tourist trade. The number of Cubans on the island was exaggerated by the Reagan Administration and all but 100 of the 784 Cubans were in fact construction workers, doctors, nurses and teachers, just as Cuba had claimed. The warehouses chock full of munitions were actually less than a quarter full and Time magazine reporter, William McWhirter, described the stores as "more of a hodgepodge of wholesale weaponry than a sophisticated armory." Some of the rifles dated to the 19th century.

Thus the fog of Reagan propaganda clears and we can see the reasons for the U.S. invasion of Grenada are lies. What is done is done, but in light of the coming election something can be changed. Will you re-elect an administration that lies to you? The choice is yours.

Reagan's budget cuts

To The Pointer:

With the presidential election coming up within two weeks and in light of the recent "debates" and talks about reducing the deficit, I felt it was time to show where Reagan's budget cuts will come from. In previous years, during the Reagan administration, the budget cuts were aimed at survival programs that directly benefit WOMEN AND CHILDREN. "Women and children make up almost 80 percent of the nation's 34.4 million poor and 12 million 'near poor.'" Women are also 73 percent of the 3.8 million elderly poor. Of the almost 10 million women-maintained families, 36.3 percent survive at or below the poverty level. Three (3) out of five (5) working women earn less than $10,000 and only 4 percent working women earn over $25,000." (WEAL Facts). It is these low-income women domestic programs assist.

This year's proposal for budget cuts again cut domestic programming for low income women and children. There is a proposed $9.2 billion cut in domestic programs. Low income programs are only 19 percent of the domestic program budget, but will undergo 40 percent of the proposed cuts.

I will list and explain some programs most people are familiar with, but there are MANY MORE programs and PEOPLE being affected by the budget cuts.

SOCIAL SECURITY:

Sixty-four percent of 36 million beneficiaries of Social Security are women and children. This includes elderly women. The last year six (6) month COLA delay will save the government $9.7 billion by 1985, but will hurt elderly women living alone with no other income.

WIC/WOMEN-INFANTS-CHILD FOOD PROGRAM:

One-hundred percent of beneficiaries are women and children. WIC serves "nutritionally" deprived nursing and pregnant mothers and children under five. At present WIC serves only 3 million of the 9 million that are eligible, with the FY85 cut of $22.5 million 400,000 children and mothers will be dropped from the program.

AFDC/AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN:

Of the 10.6 million persons of AFDC 97 percent are women and children. Four (4) out of five (5) AFDC families are single parent women, by divorce, death, etc. Of all the nation's poor children only 32 percent are on AFDC. Over 550,000 children were dropped between 1981 and 1982 and with FY85 cuts of $633 million, more will suffer. During 1981 and 1982 children in poverty rose by one million.

STUDENT AID:

Here is a program most of us are familiar with or participating in. Of the 12 million students 51 percent are women. Proposed cut in 1985 will be $300 million below the 1984 level. Total of a five year cut would be $2 billion. All Guaranteed Student Loan applicants would have to demonstrate need; male or female.

All my quotes and statistics are from WEAL Facts. If anyone is interested they may come down to the Women's Resource Center, lower-level Nelson Hall and see a copy of it or write Women's Equity Action League, 805 15th Street NW, Suite 822, Washington, DC 20005 for more information.

Now supports Mondale

To the Editor:

"Women, this is our day." Coretta Scott King proclaimed this at the National Organization for Women's annual meeting in the fall of 1983. A year has passed and a day for all women will come again November 6th when we elect the next president of the United States, Walter Mondale. We make this decision because of our magnificent "Her story" which vividly describes one of the greatest social movements in America. The right to vote was won because women leaders were willing to sacrifice and look forward to a generation of women who could shape their country's future by voting in a decisive presidential election. We are that generation of women and we have the potential to become one of the greatest political forces our country has ever seen.

Electing Walter Mondale will send a referendum to America stating economic equality cannot be denied on the basis of sex. Under the right wing Reagan platform women are economically suppressed. President Reagan has no respect for the economic equality of women. He tells his supporters that America doesn't need the ERA. Reagan's pseudo-ERA programs have fallen short of changing laws that discriminate on the basis of sex.

The Reagan administration has said yes to sexism on our campus with its narrow scope of enforcement of the Grover City College Case. The Reagan administration has said yes to sexism in America by not supporting a constitutional amendment making sex discrimination illegal.

A vote for Walter Mondale will mean that you believe one justice is not enough justice for all women. Reagan may try to hide behind his visible appointments of women, but he can't hide from the fact that his administration has appointed 19 percent fewer women than the previous administration.

Walter Mondale is not only endorsed by the National Organization for Women, but also by National Women's Caucus which has a majority of Republican women in it. These groups support Mondale for his clear stand on equality. He was the co-sponsor of the ERA and a writer of education equity acts. Walter Mondale respects the power and potential of both women and men in America.

On November 6th, I urge all Americans given the privilege to vote to do so. Also for all Mondale/Ferraro supporters and interested voters I invite you to join in on the rally and march taking place on campus Oct. 25th. Remember in November, we are the difference in 1984!

Response to Peterson

To the Editor:

Presumably, using Jeff Peterson's logic, when in reference to any disagreement or discussion with his nearest and dearest—say his mother, sister, girlfriend, POSSLO, etc.—it will be perfectly good form for anyone to say they are "bitchy," or "XXX-itch" (I can't say it, but it rhymes with rich), or maybe if we best them at some game of choice (even in moments of imaginary victory), it will be quite proper to say, "I kicked a little ass..."

Fine with me, if that's the way you want it, but don't do it with my kids' mother. It may not play too well.

By the way, I rather well remember many discussions of football games, which I abhorred, but I don't remember ever hearing the same expression George Bush insists is used—but then, wherever I've lived, we didn't use Texas logic. Most of us bought game rule books and dictionaries, aiming to use the brains in our heads instead of wherever the Bushes must have theirs.

Mayhap, George B. uses a book on etiquette prepared by his moral mentor, the Rev. Jerry Falwell. Does he, or do they, incorporate this same verbal style into the classroom prayers they plan to authorize for schoolchildren? And to think that most little kids are forced to go out in the street to learn such talk. One can well imagine the good reverend saying, "Now where the hell did Dumping Dilly learn such talk?" as he slips away on his imported Vodka.

Grenada remembered

To the Pointer,

More than 100 college campus rallies celebrating the anniversary of the invasion of Grenada were arranged for October 24. Medical students brought from Grenada during the invasion were coordinated to speak at 89 campuses by College Republicans, USA Foundation and American Opportunity Foundation. These latter two organizations are barred from partisan politics as tax-exempt organizations. But is "Student Liberation Day" nonpartisan when the head of the College Republican National Committee also chairs the USA Foundation? Jack Abramoff denies this partisan role. Yet in a Sept. 12 letter to Republican campus leaders (on CR stationery), he cites the benefits to the Reagan campaign of this event. Now what would you say, is it partisan or nonpartisan?

The College Republican's head of the College Republican National Committee, Jack Abramoff, has said the Young College Democrats were asked to join the Grenada activity. A representative for the Democrats has denied this. So what kind of an event was organized here? Is there credibility in this affiliate of the Republican National Committee?

Education cuts

To the Editor,

As November 6th approaches, a date with profound significance for students, I believe students may not know what the reelection of Ronald Reagan will mean for higher education. In the fiscal year 1985 budget, considered restrained in budget cuts because of the coming election, Reagan and his advisors proposed the total elimination of three financial aid programs (SEOG, SSIG, and GPOT) totaling $463 million. Also included in his budget requests were reductions in the NDSL program (from $188.86 to $4 million) and in aid to socially and developmentally handicapped students (from $164.74 to $82.37 million). Even with the proposed increase in college work-study, the total of these cuts is well above one-half billion dollars.

If enacted, these cuts would mean the loss of millions of students nationwide, not because they can not do college level work, but because they will no longer be able to pay the price.

Remember these are the cuts proposed in a year that Reagan supposedly used restraint. If re-elected, his budget projections call for another 40 percent reduction for financial aid programs including Pell Grants.

Fortunately for students, Congress has seen fit to reject Reagan's meat cleaver approach to higher education, but another four years of Reagan and added pressure to reduce the deficit without raising taxes will make your financial aid the prime target of Reagan's ax. Keep this in mind when you go to the polls on Tuesday, November 6th.

Religion vs. abortion

Dear Editor:

God, "He giveth to all life and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men..." (Acts 17:26-28).

Deuteronomy 12:23 tells us: "The blood is the life..."

"Who so sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man." (Genesis 9:6).

"At 17 days, the new life has developed its own blood cells; the placenta is part of the new life and not of the mother." This data has been documented and reported in medical journals.

Reagan, Mondale in final verbal shootout

by Chris Celichowski
News Editor

It wasn't exactly a "Thriller in Manila," but President Ronald Reagan and Democratic challenger Walter Mondale's rhetorical rematch in Kansas City Sunday produced some captivating flurries on foreign policy issues.

Central America
Mondale used the opening question of the debate to attack Reagan on what has quickly become a major campaign issue: a 90-page CIA manual that advised Nicaraguan contras on blackmail, mob violence, and political assassination.

"A president can't know everything, but a president has to know these things that are essential to his leadership," Mondale noted in suggesting Reagan's ignorance on the issue. Earlier, Mondale and other Democratic notables such as ex-President Jimmy Carter and House Democratic sage Tip O'Neill (D-Mass.), had urged Reagan to fire CIA Director William Casey for his agency's role in producing the document.

Reagan promised to "remove" anyone found guilty of producing the controversial briefing book, but denied that it amounted to what a questioner termed as "state-supported terrorism."

Lebanon

The United States withdrew its Marine forces from Lebanon because we were unable to complete our mission there, claimed Reagan. He refused to apologize for the deployment, despite Mondale's repeated suggestions that his policies led to the deaths of 241 leathernecks in a terrorist bombing on their Beirut barracks.

"We were succeeding and that was why the terrorist acts began," said Reagan. "There are forces there, and that includes Syria in my mind, who don't want us to succeed, who don't want that kind of peace, with a dominant Lebanon—dominant over its own territory."

Mondale used every opportunity he could during the debate to attack Reagan on the leadership issue and questions concerning U.S. actions in Lebanon were no exception.

"A president has to lead his government or it won't be done," Mondale said. He accused Reagan of ignoring pleas from both the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger to remove the Marines from Lebanon.

"They didn't do it, and we know what happened," Mondale noted in reference to the terrorist attack.

Later in the debate, after having assailed the Carter administration's role in the fall of the Shah of Iran and Ayatollah Khomeini's rise to power, Reagan drew a distinction between Lebanon and Iran. He chastised Carter for ignoring warnings that U.S. diplomatic personnel were in danger immediately before the hostage crisis began, but said it was hard to stop the suicidal truck-bombers that stormed the U.S. embassy in Beirut.

Reagan's Age

After Reagan's unexpectedly poor performance in the Philadelphia debate, many in the media pressed the age issue. Mondale refused to refer specifically to the president's age during the debate, saying, "I have not made it an issue, nor should it be. What's at issue here is the president's application of his authority to understand what a president must know."

Reagan skillfully maneuvered around the question, quipping, "I will not make age an issue of this campaign. I am not going to exploit, for political purposes, my opponent's youth and inexperience." The remark drew laughter from the audience and Mondale as well.

National Defense

Mondale "has a record of weakness with regard to our national defense that is second to none," noted Reagan. He said campaign commercials which show Mondale atop the U.S. aircraft carrier Nimitz were misleading, because if it had been up to the Democratic challenger the Nimitz would never have been built.

The president's solution to providing a strong national defense, argued Mondale, is to "throw money at the Defense Department." National strength, in Mondale's view, "is to make certain that a dollar buys us a dollar's worth of defense."

Mondale took pains to shore up his sagging image on defense issues, promising that he would "keep America strong." He dismissed Reagan's comments during the debate concerning "Star Wars" weaponry and the president's suggestion that advanced technological developments in this area be shared with the Soviet Union.

"I would not let the Soviet Union get their hands on it at all," he said. "To commit this nation to a build-up of anti-satellite and space weapons at this time," he added, "would bring about an arms race that's very dangerous indeed."

Reagan had suggested that U.S. plans for the space weapons be given to the Soviets in order to eliminate the threat of a nuclear war. He said the U.S. has gone ahead with planning for such weapons in order to provide a deterrent to Soviet aggression.

Mondale also blasted Reagan's record on arms control, accusing him of making no progress in that diplomatic area. "The president's failure to master the central elements of arms control has cost us dearly," he noted.

Human Rights

The Reagan administration has been working with the oppressive South African government, Mondale said in citing testimony by Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, who recently won the 1984 Nobel Prize, and this collision has hurt the U.S.

"We need to stand for human rights. We need to make it clear we're for human liberty," he concluded.

Reagan defended his human rights record, noting that human rights violations taking place today in both Afghanistan and Iran resulted from the failed policies of the Carter-Mondale administration.

"Human rights are not advanced," the president argued, "when at the same time you then stand back and say, 'Whoops, we didn't know your gun was loaded,' and you have another totalitarian power on your hands."

In his closing statement, Mondale cited the responsibility that each president has in ultimately deciding whether or not to use nuclear weapons. He urged voters to consider Reagan's record on arms control when making their choice on Nov. 6.

"Above all, pick a president who will fight to avoid the day when that God-awful decision ever needs to be made," he concluded.

Reagan made a slight gaff in his closing statement, asking the nationwide audience, "Do you want to see America return to the policies of weakness of the last four years?" rather than saying, "of four years ago" or a similar statement. In addition, he was unable to complete his closing statement. Moderator Edwin Newman informed Reagan that he had reached the time limit during an anecdotal story designed to stress Reagan's desire for world peace.

The Kansas City debate, sponsored by the League of Women Voters, was the last presidential debate of the campaign.

Salvadoran rebel vows to join dialogue with Duarte

by Al P. Wong
News Editor

Early last week a historical event took place in El Salvador. Salvadoran government officials met with rebel leaders for talks in an attempt to end the war after five years of fighting.

The talks did not end with all the issues solved, but the two sides agreed to form a joint commission to study the issues. President Jose Napoleon Duarte called on the leftist guerrillas, who call themselves FDR-FMLN (Democratic Revolutionary Front-Farabundo Marti Liberation Front), to take part in Salvadoran elections, while the rebels asked for social reforms and war crime trials.

Earlier, a group of rightist death squads warned President Duarte that he would be a target of military action for offering to talk with the FDR-FMLN. Although there was concern about security surrounding the talks, the meeting took place without incident.

It may take a lot of effort and determination from both the government and the rebels to work out a solution to their problems. The dialogue last week could be a big step forward, but how far each side would go in making concessions remains to be seen.

"The FDR-FMLN will continue with the dialogues but will not drop arms yet," a representative of the FDR-FMLN for the midwest region, Guillermo DePaz, said last Saturday. He said that the FDR-FMLN will fight for the rights of the people of El Salvador. "We want a guarantee from the government for the well-being of the people," he exclaimed.

DePaz was speaking to an audience at the University Center in place of Robert Armstrong and Sonya Baires who were scheduled as speakers of the event but had not been able to attend. Armstrong, a historian and author, is on the research staff of the North American Congress on Latin America (NACLA), and Baires is an official representative of FDR-FMLN in the United States.

DePaz began his speech with a rundown on the history of El Salvador from the Spaniards' arrival in El Salvador in the 1500s to present time. He said that the indigenous natives of El Salvador have experienced many changes in both its cultural and political affairs.

"The FDR-FMLN has been seeking a dialogue with the government for four years," DePaz commented. The recent dialogue, he claimed, was offered by President Duarte as a national and international publicity stunt for the government. "They just wanted the good publicity," DePaz charged.

President Duarte and his government have been the focus of sharp criticisms since he gained control of the country. His government has been charged with violations of human rights and killing of many civilians. These stories have made their way to the front pages of top newspapers around the country. And the Reagan administration has been continuously criticized for its involvement in the Central America region. The Reagan administration has been supplying the Duarte government with military aid, which the FDR-FMLN said has provided weapons that have killed many civilians.

The FDR-FMLN consists of two bodies that have united into one. The FDR is a political party while the FMLN is made up of the military. The FDR-FMLN was formed in El Salvador in 1980-81 after government troops began assassinating opponents of the government, DePaz explained.

According to DePaz, President Duarte originally did not want the FDR involved in the dialogue. He said the president requested that only the commanders of FMLN will meet with his officials, but the FMLN objected to the proposal and the FDR was, in the end, included in the talks, DePaz said.

The dialogue has already generated much interest. The Reagan administration, for one, has regarded the talks as being important to its success in Central America. The FDR-FMLN has pledged to continue in its efforts to seek a solution to the problem, DePaz said, "but we will not lay down our arms yet."

The event was sponsored by the Committee on Latin America (COLA).

UC referendum passes

by Al P. Wong
News Editor

Students voted on a referendum Tuesday to decide if UWSP should stay on as a member of United Council, a statewide student lobby organization based in Madison. A total of 158 students voted on the issue. One hundred six students voted in favor while 52 voted against. This means that UWSP will stay on in United Council for another two years.

Even though the referendum turned out favorably, Student Government Association Vice President Mike Verbrick, who is also the director of United Council for UWSP, said the turnout was really low. He said that a total of about 9,200 students were eligible to vote, but only 158 did so.

"However, I am happy with the outcome," he said.

Ronald Reagan: the choice of young America

by Jeff Peterson
Students for Reagan

One of the major surprises of this election year won't be the historic landslide victory the American people will give President Reagan on November 6th, rather it's the reason why President Reagan is going to win by such a tremendous margin.

Despite the illusions some on this campus create, President Reagan has been able to win the support of voters between the ages of 18 and 25 by an overwhelming margin. In poll after poll President Reagan's highest popularity rating has been from our generation. President Reagan has captured the 18-25 year old vote by a 42-point margin 60 to 18 percent. That's 10 percent larger than his lead among other groups. Another surprising fact is that for every one 18-35 year old registering as a Democrat, two are registering as a Republican. In addition, for every one Independent voter in our age group three are registering Republican. Many reasons are given for this. Some believe that President Reagan is the first president that our generation has had which we can really admire and look up to.

Many of today's young people disagree with some of Reagan's social policies, yet they respect him as a strong leader. Mondale and Ferraro lack our trust and confidence as most of us see them as being weak on defense. The foreign policies of Mondale and Ferraro are viewed as being naive and a threat to our national security. We are well aware of the fact that Mondale has one of the worst records in the areas of defense and foreign affairs in the history of the U.S. Senate. Picking a three-term Congresswoman as a Vice President candidate has done nothing to gain our confidence and trust. Mondale is just too big of a gamble for most of us. What would happen if he would somehow get elected and then couldn't finish his term. Most Americans believe Mrs. Ferraro isn't qualified to be President. Voting for President Reagan is just common sense, and most of us are showing that we are too level-headed to vote for Mondale and Ferraro.

Many of us also have rallied around the President because his economic policies appeal to us. Finding a job after graduation concerns us all and with President Reagan we are assured of finding that first job. With Mondale we have to believe that we will be going from the graduation line to the unemployment line if his past record is any indication of what to expect from him. Mondale represents old failed policies which lead to inflation, high interest rates, high unemployment, and out-of-control spending. Reagan's growth, prosperity and opportunity programs give us assurance and hope for our future.

President Reagan has captured our imagination and made us feel good about America again with his positive attitude. Our generation has made love of country fashionable again and knows what patriotism really is. You're never going to see our generation act like those 18 to 25 years olds did in the 1960s. Instead of burning the American flag in our streets and evading the draft, our generation is waving the flag and volunteering for the military. We see serving our country as a privilege. Our generation believes in America and respects those who have fought, served and died for our country.

Our generation refuses to look down in shame or to apologize for our nation. We reject the gloom, doom, and wishy washy human rights foreign policy of Carter, Mondale and Ferraro.

President Reagan is decisive, competent, forceful, and is a real leader. There is no person more committed to real peace, justice and freedom than President Reagan and our generation knows that.

Here at UWSP we have a very vocal minority of students who support the liberal philosophy of Mondale. On campus we have some active organizations that talk about justice and liberty. These groups and students represent those naive and simple-minded dangerous policies which pose a threat to our national security. They support a party that is out of touch with reality and that is out of step with our generation. Some of our more liberal peers here seem to advocate going back to the unrest and civil disobedience of the 1960s. They attempt to brainwash the rest of us with their disillusionment. Today while the majority of us are looking to the future and share that American dream and vision that President Reagan has, others insist on living in the past.

We have reason to be proud of our generation for helping make America great and respected again in the world. It's no accident that our generation is behind President Reagan and is turning to the Republican Party as the party of that future. Our generation knows what is right about America. We don't need anyone telling us what's wrong with it. We can't blame Mondale for liking President Reagan. Afterall, we like him too.

Most Americans not better off than four years ago

by Noel Radomski
Young Democrats

President Reagan told us from the beginning that he believed in the survival of the fittest. "Government can't do everything," we were told. So the Reagan Administration settled for taking care of the strong and thought that charity and economic ambition would take care of the rest. Make the rich richer and what falls from their table will be enough for the middle class and those trying to work their way to the middle class.

The Republicans called it trickle-down when Hoover tried it. Now they call it supply-side.

The President has asked us to judge him on whether or not he has fulfilled the promise he made four years ago. Reagan claims we're living in a strong recovery. But why does he say this? We are now experiencing in this country the false glow of a temporary boom, financed by a policy of "borrow and borrow, spend and spend." Every working day our government is spending almost one billion dollars more than it receives and in just 3½ years has created the most appalling budget deficit in history. According to the Congressional Budget Office (which is respected by almost everyone), the projected budget deficits will continue to climb. In the year 1989, they project a budget deficit of $273 billion. Many experts say it would make sense to propose a tax increase, or take some other fiscal measure to reduce the deficit now when times are "relatively" good.

Under President Reagan, there are now 34 million people living in poverty, 15 percent of our nation. Twenty-three million are white, 11 million black, Hispanic, Asians and others. Most of them are women and children. By the end of this year, there will be 41 million victims of poverty. The Census Bureau, just a month ago, reported there are more people living under poverty now, a million more people living under it than when Reagan took office. There have been a number of studies, including studies by the Urban Institute and other non-political

Reagan supports women with policies, laws

by UWSP College Republicans
Students for Reagan

President Reagan has appointed an unprecedented number of women to important posts within his administration. He has done more than any other president in history to further the position of women in our country. And yet, the Democrats try to distort his progress. Specifically, President Reagan made history by appointing Sandra Day O'Connor to the United States Supreme Court. He has also named three women to his cabinet: Jeane Kirkpatrick as Ambassador to the United Nations, Elizabeth Dole as Secretary of Transportation and Margaret Heckler as Secretary of Health and Human Services, the government department which controls the third largest budget in the world.

And if you look on the new dollar bill, you see the name of yet another Reagan appointee: Katherine Ortega, Treasurer of the United States. Women also head such institutions as the Peace Corps, Federal Labor Relations Authority and the Consumer Product Safety Commission, to name a few. In addition, President Reagan has appointed women to more than 1,600 policy and management positions in his administration, and 57 percent of all the president's political appointments have been women.

President Reagan's economic policies have also been favorable for women. Unemployment is easing, which means better career opportunities. Inflation has been cut to under four percent, which adds up to more purchasing power.

Not only does President Reagan support women through his policies, he also defends them through his legislation. To ensure legal rights for women, the president created the "Task Force on Equity for Women" to review sex-biased statutes. Time and again President Reagan has proven his track record on reforms for women. So now it is time we do the same. We need a strong president to support rights for women. And we have him. President Ronald Reagan.

UC passes faculty pay resolution

by Al P. Wong
News Editor

The United Council of Student Governments convened last Friday and Saturday at UWSP for another monthly session of meetings and deliberations. A resolution on affirmative action in United Council and another on the faculty pay issue were among the resolutions passed at the meeting.

The affirmative action resolution was presented by the Minority Affairs Committee of United Council, one of several standing committees in the lobby organization. The resolution requires a member school to include in its delegation to United Council at least one woman and one minority representative.

United Council defines a minority representative as a racial minority, or a disabled-handicapped individual, or an individual of an underrepresented group.

Those member schools found in violation with the criteria stated in the resolution will be denied all voting privileges during the general assembly meeting, the resolution read. An appeals committee will also be set up to hear and question any grievances.

There are nine member schools in United Council at the present time. They are UW-Madison, UW-Milwaukee, UW-Stevens Point, UW-Stout, UW-Oshkosh, UW-Green Bay, UW-Whitewater, UW-Superior and UW-Platteville.

Native American art on exhibit in COPS

Awards have been presented to four artists whose works are in a current exhibition of traditional Indian art at UWSP.

Wood carvings, basket making, metal work and bead work are among the nearly 40 pieces that will be shown 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mondays through Fridays until Nov. 2 in the Gallery Room (127) of the Professional Studies Building.

James Frechette, Rhinelander, is the recipient of the first prize award of $250 for his wood-carving of a wolf figure from the lore of his people, the Menominees.

Mrs. Aksiga Blackcoon Decora, a Winnebago Indian from Fairchild, received the $100 second prize for her baskets constructed of black ash.

Mrs. Irene Thundercloud, Tomah, was given $75 for the third place entry of a ceremonial dress for a 10-year-old girl of her tribe, the Winnebago.

And the $50 fourth prize went to Turman Lowe, Madison, also a Winnebago, for his German silver work, which was a popular trade item early in the 19th century, made from copper, zinc and nickel, but appearing like silver.

The three "best of shows" for exemplary pieces went to Frechette for his carving of an eagle in flight, gliding with a Menominee bear figure which depicts the origin of his tribe; to Mrs. Decora for a clothes hamper, and Mrs. Ruth Greengrass Cloud, Baraboo, a Winnebago, for her market basket.

The juried show was done by both Indians and non-Indians representing three Wisconsin museums.

In addition to the money, the prize winners also were given ribbons and medallions.

The university was joined by the UWSP Student Government Association and AIRO (American Indians Resisting Ostracism of UWSP) in sponsoring the show.

History Professor David Wrona, who coordinated the planning, said guided tours of the exhibition for groups can be arranged by contacting him.

organizations, that say that the impact of the tax and budget cuts in Reagan's economic policies have impacted severely on certain classes of Americans: working mothers, head of households, minority groups, elderly poor. In fact, the studies show that the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer under the Reagan Administration.

Under this regime, the 1981 budget cuts included nine permanent Social Security benefit cuts totaling $20 billion over five years.

In 1980, Mr. Bush did an analysis of Mr. Reagan's economic plan. He concluded that Reagan's economic plan was "VOO DOO ECONOMICS." Third party John Anderson in 1980 said that the combination of military spending, tax cuts and a balanced budget by 1984 could be accomplished with blue smoke and mirrors. Both were right.

Also, with the large deficits in place, what's called the real interest rates — the spread between inflation and what a loan costs — doubled. And that's still the case today. The result is interest costs that have never been seen before in terms of real charges. It's attributable primarily to the deficit. Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers told him this. Every chairman of the Senate Finance House Ways and Means Committees and Republican leaders in the Senate and House tell Reagan that the deficit is ruining the long-term hopes for the economy. It is causing high interest rates. It has also given us the highest small-business failure rate in 50 years. The economy is starting downhill, and we are standing on a trap door ready to go down.

Reagan is paying for short-term jobs by deficit spending. Military spending, a major cause of the deficit, is projected over the next five years to be nearly $2 trillion. When the government borrows $200 billion annually to finance the budget, this encourages the private sector to invest in bonds and bills offering high interest rates as opposed to development and economic growth. By 1984, it is projected.

Free planetarium programs offered at UWSP in '84

Six planetarium programs for the public, each to be offered at least three times, will be held between now and the end of April at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

All of the shows have free admission and are held at 3 p.m. Sundays on the second floor of the Science Center. Doors open one-half hour before showtime and seating for about 70 people is available on a first come-first served basis.

Five of the presentations will be different versions of programs with similar titles in last year's series.

Because Halley's comet has returned and is now in view with the use of telescopes, this phenomenon will be the topic of the new program scheduled three times in March.

The Sunday presentations are made by Mark Bernstein, director of the planetarium, who has been teaching in the physics/astronomy department since 1982 with a Ph.D. in astronomy and astrophysics from the University of Indiana.

In addition, organizations and school groups may arrange to have special programs on weekdays by contacting Bernstein. Five upperclass students serve as presenters. They are Derek Carlson and Steve Kolins, both of Stevens Point; Kevin Stellman of Wisconsin Rapids; and Greg Leavitt of Plover.

The Sunday programs, their descriptions by Bernstein and dates of showing are:

— "The Astronomical Zoo, Part I" on Oct. 14, 21 and 28.

BEIRUT—As security threats continue, the Reagan administration has decided to reduce the size of the staff in the United States Embassy here. On Monday, 26 American employees of the Embassy were flown out, reducing the number of official American personnel to 30.

PEKING—China has announced plans for sweeping changes in its economy in which competition will be stressed. Government will reduce control over the economy while capitalist-style market forces will be introduced. The new measures will give greater freedom to a million state-owned enterprises and make them compete to survive. The changes in the economic structure were adopted at a meeting of the Communist Party Control Committee last Saturday.

GENEVA—Oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) began gathering here for an emergency meeting scheduled for next Monday after three countries cut their oil prices last week. The 13 OPEC members, led by Saudi Arabia, will try to avoid a price war. Last week, Norway and Britain, two non-OPEC members, and Nigeria, an OPEC member, announced price reductions. OPEC said in a statement that its members were determined to maintain and strengthen the oil price and will take every necessary measure in this respect.

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA—Nicaragua's economic problems are growing, and government officials here are predicting that shortages and other hardships will continue for at least several more years. The Sandinistas have charged that the United States has played a major role in creating these difficulties by cutting off foreign aid, restricting purchases of Nicaraguan goods and opposing Nicaragua's loan applications at international lending agencies.

WASHINGTON—Education Secretary Terrel Bell warned that the quality of undergraduate education in America has lagged and called for prompt action "to maintain the traditional excellence in our higher education system." A study commissioned by the National Institute of Education has been completed and a panel of seven scholars has made 27 recommendations to improve undergraduate education. One of the proposals said that all students should take at least two years of liberal arts courses, even if that forces them to spend more than four years getting a bachelor's degree. "We have the finest and the most advanced and emulated system of higher education in the world," Bell said. "Our justifiable pride ought to be tempered with a bit of apprehension."

WASHINGTON—Legislators are asking if the Reagan administration knew about the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency in Nicaragua after the disclosures of possibly illegal activities by the agency. A classified Defense Intelligence Agency report disclosed that American-backed Nicaraguan guerrillas were committing political assassinations as early as 1982. An executive order signed by President Reagan in 1981 prohibits government personnel from taking part in assassinations.

The Scandal of the year we've all been Waite-ing for!

by Amy L. Schroeder
Features Editor

This Sunday, October 28, Scandal, featuring Patty Smyth, will rock the Quandt Fieldhouse, with what Scandal calls "a sort of urban-guerrilla-war-fare...urban stories about girls."

Smyth's "urban stories" are said to be the major contributing force behind the group's large audience within such a short time.

Scandal's debut LP brought with it two hits, "Goodbye To You," and "Love's Got a Line on You," making it the largest selling LP in the history of Columbia Records. Scandal's current release LP, The Warrior, has sold ¾ of a million copies in ten weeks.

Smyth, the 27-year-old lead singer of Scandal, grew up in Manhattan, where she and her sister led a street gang called the Invaders.

Patty said she spent the majority of her growing up years (age 5-13) at the coffeehouse, and Greenwich Village clubs where her mother worked. These included the Gaslight, the Cafe Wha, The Four Winds, and the Zig Zag. Patty admits that her school records were not very good because she used to beg her mother to let her come to the clubs and then she rarely made it up for school the next day.

It was at these clubs that Patty met up with the likes of folk and rock performers from the Lovin' Spoonful to the Blue Magoos. Patty said, "I would hang out with them when they came offstage. They would take me to the feast in Little Italy..."

Patty admits that hanging around performers all the time is probably a major reason why she grew up wanting to be a singer.

Influenced by groups like the O'Jays, Funkadelic and the Stylistics, Smyth made her first club appearance at the age of 15 in New York and began writing her first songs at the age of 16. She then sang acid rock songs with a psychedelic band for a short period. Later Smyth had the chance to appear at Catch a Rising Star, where Pat Benetar also began her career.

During the 70's Patty played solo, accompanying herself on the piano around several clubs in New York City.

Patty admits that at this point in her career, she was feeling very alienated from the rock and roll scene because she "hated punk rock," and was too into soul and "black music."

Smyth "re-admitted" herself into the rock scene in 1979, when she took a liking to the sounds of the Clash and Elvis Costello.

Smyth then started her own trio, which eventually led to her meeting up with Zack Smith of Concept.

"I picked up the pay phone one day in a restaurant," she said, and "he said he wanted me to be in a band he had dreamed up called Scandal." Together they found a song he (Smith) had written called "Good-bye to You," in a "Hump of Junk," in his apartment. From there they got a deal with Columbia Records.

After the first record, Zack Smith, the original founder of Scandal, officially left the band. Since the recording of The Warrior Album, the band's drummer also left to play with Billy Idol.

The new Scandal lineup now consists of Keith Mack and Rick Difonzo on the guitar, Lee Foxx on bass, and Jimmy Wilcox on drums.

Teamed with Scandal for this weekend's major concert will be mainstream hard rocker, John Waite.

Waite, originally the lead singer and founding member of The Babys, has now gone solo, under a new record label, EMI, launching his career to a new high point.

The release of his second solo album, No Brakes, has brought him the hit single, "Missing You." This hit has finally established him what he has always wanted to be considered, "a mainstream hard rocker."

Waite says "Missing You" was the quickest he has ever written a song. "I wrote the entire song all at once, inside three minutes," comments Waite.

In contrast, another song off the album, entitled "Dreamtime," took nearly half a year to complete.

Waite, who was brought up in the quiet lakes region of northern England, says the No Brakes album is "a lot about me. The record was really quite a shattering thing, all bits and pieces of my life."

Waite also added that No conflicts between her and Smith, they still plan to get together to write for future albums.

Smyth has now emerged as the leader of the band. She says she enjoys her job now more than ever before.

"Finally somebody has to make decisions and, I'd rather it be me than somebody else, frankly."

Recently, Patty was involved in the making of a video to promote their latest hit, "The Warrior."

Smyth loves to be out on the road, where her closest companion is guitarist, Keith Mack.

Today, although the name Patty Smyth is fast becoming one of the most recognizable on the top 40 charts, she still is found residing on one of "the scuzziest" blocks in the East Village. Smyth describes the scene there as, "New Jersey guys, cruising the streets for hookers, then getting beat up by the pimps."

For Patty, Scandal has really been her first long-term project and now that she's in charge she says, "I've never been more in love with my work."

Brakes is the inscription he wants on his tombstone.

Waite's personality has been described as much like the "personality" of his music: energetic, witty and colorful.

Although he now resides in New York City, Waite admits that he often longs for the quiet, rambling countryside of his country house in England, located just outside London.

Waite is currently touring North America through October, with a band he had to put together in a hurry.

His bass player from the No Brakes album left to record with Pat Benetar, and his drummer recently teamed up with The Gary Myrth Group.

Waite will be working on a new album after he completes his tour. Its release date is set for January of 1985. Waite says he wants to produce this one all by himself.

Waite's uninhibited energy source is prevalent in his style of music. He comments, "If I weren't a musician, I'd probably be a car thief. I'm sure I'd be doing something totally unacceptable. I've got too much energy."

He adds, "About the only thing I don't want to do is start playing weddings."

University writers are artistic

by Lisa Gay

UNIVERSITY WRITERS, now in its twelfth year as a campus organization has grown to become a socially and artistically active group. Though core membership may be smaller than other campus organizations, UNIVERSITY WRITERS touches people far beyond the borders of campus.

We have become one of the major sponsors of RITES OF WRITING, a spring celebration of writing. From poetry to business and technical writing, from folklore to song writing and children's stories, the RITES caters to the students at UWSP, the people of the community and to many other area schools.

In addition to co-sponsoring the RITES, UNIVERSITY WRITERS brings nationally known writers to campus for public readings and workshops. And if you are too shy to show your work to someone famous, there are always the organization workshops held every Wednesday evening at 6 p.m. in 304 Collins (The Writing Lab — our homebase and source of inspiration).

UNIVERSITY WRITERS also is now accepting submissions for BARNEY STREET VIII, the UWSP Literary Magazine published every spring. What once began as an experiment in combining the talents of writers, editors, layout designers and people interested in the writing, publishing and marketing process, is now a publication our campus can be proud of.

Last year submissions came from as far as New Jersey, but the majority of works published are from students here on campus. This year we look forward to receiving submissions in pen and ink drawing, black and white photography, poetry and short fiction. Submission deadline is December 17th, 1984, and must be accompanied by a Self-Addressed Stamped Envelope if unaccepted work is to be returned.

UNIVERSITY WRITERS is also a member of the Associated Writing Programs. We receive their quarterly newsletter which contains pages of writing contests, scholarships, and job openings as well as the latest news in the world of literature. This spring the AWP conference is to be held in San Diego. From April 10-13, 1985, writers, speakers, and AWP members from universities and other organizations across the United States will gather to share their knowledge, upcoming events and publications.

Every lecture by a visiting writer or speaker is open to the people of the campus and community.

Talking Psychology

by Michael A. DeLain

The Psychology Club is open to all students in Stevens Point who have an interest in psychology. The club's purpose is to promote a better understanding of psychology on campus and to aid incoming freshmen in psychology-related career choices. The club sponsors speakers, films, road trips and an end-of-the-year picnic.

Plans for this year include a slide presentation by Dan Kortenkamp on the life of Van Gogh. Kortenkamp's talk is about the psychotic disorders of Van Gogh and the art created during certain critical periods of his breakdown. A very moving presentation which is highly recommended by anyone who has seen it. Kortenkamp will be talking either the first or second week of November.

Psychology Club is working on getting speakers from a suicide prevention center and a family abuse center to visit campus and talk with interested students. Details on these will be posted on the Psych Club board.

Annual trip to MPA (Midwestern Psychological Association) in Chicago will be the first weekend in May, again check the board second semester for details. MPA is an excellent chance to see what is being done in the field of psychology and in special interest areas one may have. Psychology Club pays a good deal for members so the cost is very minimal.

The Psychology Club picnic is held on second semester registration day and is open to students and faculty. Members get an elaborate dinner with plenty of free refreshments for all who show up.

Psi Chi Honor Society

Psi Chi is the National Honor Society in Psychology, founded in 1929, for the purpose of encouraging, stimulating and maintaining scholarship in and advancing the science of psychology.

Psi Chi serves the two major goals; the first is the society's obligation to provide academic recognition to its initiatives by membership. The second goal is the obligation of each of the society's local chapters to nurture the spark of that accomplishment by offering a climate congenial to its creative development.

The following events have been scheduled for this spring: Junior graduate school night, Initiation and Psychology Awards Banquet, the National Convention and trips to various research symposiums. General meetings will be announced.

Anyone interested in membership should contact Dr. Doug Henderson, B337 Science, X3070, or Bob Moritz at 341-1480.

Dietetics promoting nutrition

The Dietetics Club (Alpha Delta Alpha) has as its goals this year to inform the campus and community of better nutrition, and to help prepare club members for their future in dietetics. Activities planned to meet those goals include a Question Box in the University Center for students to hand in nutrition questions they've been just dying to ask. These will be answered by dietetics students, along with references, and sent back to the individual. Another project involves compiling a cookbook for the community, with nutritional recipes submitted by dietetics students.

To prepare club members for their life after graduation, the club offers talks by guest speakers on internships and work experience, membership in the American Dietetics Association, and firsthand experience by alumni now in the field. A trip to the Betty Crocker plant in Minneapolis is also planned for the end of October, along with a tour of the University of Minnesota's Hospital Dietary Department, giving members a chance to see what future work places may look like.

On Nov. 10, the club is sponsoring a time-management and goal-getting seminar by a representative from the Ken Schmidt Public Relations firm in Milwaukee. This is open to the campus and community; watch for more details on this.

And, of course, we can't forget the club's annual Thanksgiving Bread Sale—a melt-in-your-mouth, time-honored tradition!! Club members will be taking orders for the bread in the Concourse from Nov. 12-14, and will deliver it at the same place Nov. 19 and 20. Don't miss it!!

"Vet Club"

The Pre-Veterinary Medical Society "vet club" is in its third year of existence. Since its beginning in the fall of 1982, there have been some changes in the goals of the club.

This year our club is as strong as ever with 25 members and again there have been some changes in our goals. Because of the competitiveness of veterinary school, we try to set our goals so that they are most useful to the student who wishes to apply to vet school.

One of the major functions of our organization is to gather information about vet school and present this to the members. As well as distribute information, we try to give guidance so that the information is put to proper use.

As a club we try to take field trips on occasion. Experience and knowledge of the field are a must for acceptance into vet school. These field trips are planned so that our members

O.J. Sinclair sat in the kitchen munching a bowl of Alpha-Bits, his face bathed in the cathode light streaming from a 12-inch portable television anchored on the kitchen counter.

It was a gloomy Saturday morning in White Plains, N.Y., and like most seven-year-old boys across America, O.J. was watching cartoons. Sandwiched between 15-minute spurts of animated violence that would do any "Dirty Harry" movie justice were commercials designed to entice young consumers.

"Once a big monster tried to grab me, so I ate him," blared the TV. Young O.J. giggled as he watched the monster vanish into thin air.

His mother shook her head slowly as she put the finishing touches on a taco dip appetizer for a church potluck supper that night. She watched O.J.'s round shoulders shake as he chuckled at the animated inanity blotting the boob tube. Jo Beth Sinclair had often wondered whether O.J.'s sub-par performance in school was attributable to the four-hour trance he went into every Saturday morning.

"Hey, Mommy!! Watch this! Once a big..." O.J. said breathlessly. He cut himself off in mid-sentence as he scanned the kitchen for something to "eat" with his bowl of Alpha-Bits. He spied his Darth Vader toy perched on the edge of the dinette table. Carefully spelling Darth aloud, "D-A-R-T-H," O.J. arranged the animated letters in his oversized spoon. Then he continued his demonstration.

"Mommy!" he said, trying to regain her attention. "Once Darth Vader snuck up on me, so I ate him," O.J. said, lifting the spoon to his grinning mouth. Jo rolled her eyes to the heavens, hearing a sigh of disgust. O.J. fixed his eyes on the doll, shoved the fortified candy in his mouth, and watched in awe as the Empire's chief protagonist vanished.

"Mommy, Mommy, Mommy!!!" he shrieked, "my Darth Vader doll—it really disappeared!"

With her eyes fixed on the kitchen ceiling, Jo had not seen O.J.'s little vanishing trick.

"O.J., don't lie to me," she half-scooled.

"No, Mommy. He really did disappear. Honest," O.J. said earnestly.

"What am I going to do with that boy," Jo thought, putting a stern look on her face. "O.J., you know the doll didn't disappear. As a matter of fact, I don't even recall seeing it. Now stop lying to me, young man."

"But..." he protested.

"No 'buts,' O.J.," she threatened. "I don't want to hear any more about it."

O.J. pushed himself away from the table, tears streaming down his face and sprinted from the kitchen. Jo Beth was used to these little tantrums. As an only child, O.J. had been spoiled rotten and Jo knew it. After an hour or so he would come out of his room, mope around the house, and pout in a visible corner. She would go over to the corner, tell O.J. she hadn't meant to be so harsh, and give him a kiss. After a few minutes, the frown would disappear and O.J. would wrap his chubby arms around Jo and give her a big, wet kiss.

Jo heard O.J. slam his door upstairs, and went back to her taco dip.

Bill Sinclair, the family patriarch, was at the White Plains Racquet Club taking out a week's worth of corporate frustrations on the racquetball court and his playing partner, Rob Smitts. Both strained to advance in the Post Cereal corporate racquetball tournament. As corporate VP in charge of marketing, Bill considered it a matter of pride to beat the living shit out of clerk Smitts. He was doing it, too. He slapped the match point against the wall and watched in smug self-satisfaction as his underling dove vainly to return it.

"Nice game, Rob," Bill said as he offered his hand to the fallen weekend gladiator. Actually, Smitts had played three horrible games, and both men knew it. But corporate protocol called for the half-hearted salutation, and Bill—never one to deviate from corporate protocol—offered the lie unabashedly.

As both men sat in the sauna, Rob Smitts thought he'd try and score a few promotional points with his boss by talking company business.

"So, Bill, how's that new artificial sweetener our lab developed coming along?" he queried.

"Great!" Sinclair replied as sweat rivulets rolled down his face. "Just great. As a matter of fact, we're test marketing it right now," he added.

Smitts was surprised. He'd heard the artificial sweetener, code named Sucra-7, had only been tested on laboratory rats. Not wanting to reveal his ignorance, he pumped Sinclair for more information asking, "Yeah, I know. But where is it being test-marketed?"

Sinclair stared at Rob Smitts with a look that told the clerk he'd been a little too inquisitive. Smitts knew the look well, and

This was told to me by a good friend who claims to have experienced a poltergeist's tricks. Although her story cannot be authenticated, I believe it. You must decide for yourself.

When Lynn and her roommate, Karen, moved into their dorm room, they didn't notice anything unusual. Although it was in the oldest building on campus, their room was clean and comfortable.

During their first month, however, strange things began to happen. The girls would hear strange sounds, bumps and thumps, during the night. They would come home from class to find papers strewn on the floor. Vases were knocked over. Glasses were broken. Keys and other important items were found hidden in strange places.

Lynn and Karen didn't tell anyone about their experiences. They just waited to see what would happen next.

One night, Lynn was awakened by a cold draft. She saw a figure in a long, white gown standing near her bed. Thinking that it was Karen, she mumbled, "Close the window," and went back to sleep. The next morning, Karen swore that she had been asleep all night and had been wearing a black gown besides. And, of course, the window was closed and locked.

The tricks went on. The girls were constantly getting locked out of their room. Make-up was spilled on their dressers. Ashtrays were overturned.

Lynn began to read up on the supernatural. Her books said that poltergeists are harmless but annoying. They love to play tricks on people and are able to communicate with humans when they want to.

Lynn decided to try and contact whatever was in their room. She locked the door and windows, and made sure that no one could hear her (not even Karen). Then she spoke, "I don't know what or who you are, but I don't want to hurt you. If you want to send me a message, you can write it on this paper with this black crayon. I'll leave it here for you."

Lynn didn't tell Karen about her attempt to contact the poltergeist. She just left the paper and crayon on her desk and waited. Nothing appeared.

It wasn't until a week later than Lynn got the message. She was getting a sweater down from the top shelf in her closet when she saw it. Written on the wall in the closet were the words "SEEING IS BELIEVING" in black crayon. Lynn quickly went to look in Karen's closet and there she saw "GHOSTS CAN'T WRITE, CAN THEY?"

Or can't they?

Do you believe in ghosts, spirits, the supernatural?

On November 22, 1932, something terrible happened on a small college campus in Minnesota; something that no one would ever forget.

A young student who was attending the university to become a priest decided that he was in the wrong career. He made an appointment with one of the old priests on campus to talk over his problem. The meeting was to take place in the priest's room in the monastery at 7 p.m. on November 22, 1932.

The following day when the priest didn't show up for morning prayer service, a group of students were sent to his room. They knocked on his door but there was no answer. Slowly, one of the students opened the door, and what he saw was absolutely horrifying: The old priest was lying on the floor in a pool of blood with multiple stab wounds, and lying right beside him with a knife stuck through his chest was the young student.

Today, the old monastery has been made into a dorm that is very popular among the students because the rooms are much larger than the other dorms on campus. But there is always trouble in that dorm. It seems as if every four years someone who lives there is killed. They say that when someone commits suicide their soul never rests. It is always looking for revenge.

On the night of November 22, 1960, a young man decided to jog. A short while later, a piercing scream was heard about 7 p.m. throughout the campus. People immediately went out to where the scream was heard, but could find nothing. They decided they would go back out in the morning when it was light enough to see if anything could be found.

What they found in the morning was a nightmare! The young man that had been jogging the night before was lying on the ground, his eyes bulged out of their sockets! His face was twisted in a way that showed how horrified he had been when he died. His fingernails had grown to a length of five inches! They say that when a person is extremely horrified, this will happen. An autopsy was performed, and showed that this healthy young man died of a heart attack! What could have been seen that horrified him to death?

Four years later, on the same date, four college students were driving down from the bluffs on a snowy evening. All of a sudden, out of the middle of nowhere, someone ran directly in front of their car! The driver slammed on the brakes and slid over the cliff. The car exploded on impact and the police were called to the scene.

When they arrived, two students were pronounced dead at the scene, but out of some miracle, the other two were walking around without a scratch on them! They explained to the officers that someone had walked directly in front of their car, which had caused the accident. Well, if this was the case, there should be tracks in the snow, but none were found. Who was this person that crossed right in front of them who had left no tracks?

Four years after the preceding incident, three young men had moved into the dorm with the large rooms, before most of the other students had arrived. The dorm was very quiet and was being readied for the incoming students. The phones had not been hooked up yet, but one night the phone in the hall started to ring. One of the students went out to pick up the phone, but no one was on the line. This happened two more times, and on the fourth time the student was getting pretty upset. First of all, the phones weren't even supposed to be working, and then to top it off no one was ever on the line! He picked up the phone again, but this time he said, "Is anyone on the line?" To his surprise, right through the dial tone, someone said in a soft man's voice, "Go check my friend in Room 151." It was said so slowly and so softly that he had to ask the man to repeat it. Again the voice said, "Go check my friend in Room 151."

By this time the realized that there Room 151, and fur phones weren't called his other were staying with one of them can room. "What I John?" the stude thought to himself in Room 151. The over to the room door, and there w friend! His expres similar to the jo autopsy also rev had had a heart at

The closet door was closing. . .

Editor's Note — While portions of the above story stem from the mind of the author, many excerpts of the "D.C. story" have been told throughout the years. Research conducted at the courthouse, Stevens Point Police Department and Protective Services revealed the entire story was the product of an ex-Hyerite's imagination.

I had always kept a cross in my pocket. I was never really a religious person. I never knew why I carried it with me, until now.

That car was beautiful! I had passed by it many times, and every time I would stop and stare at it like it was calling to me. It was a shiny black with fire blood-red racing stripes ranging from fat to so thin you could hardly see them running across both sides of the car.

I got curious, and looked in the darkly tinted windows. On the front dashboard was black fur. There was fur on the back dashboard beneath the back window too. The rest of the interior was even more of a blood-red than the stripes on the outside. As I looked, I saw the dealer. He walked over to me very cautiously, and looked at the car in the funniest way.

"You interested?" he asked. "Very," I said smiling widely. He looked at me like I was crazy.

"How much you askin'?" "Twenty-five dollars." I looked at him like he was crazy. "You're kidding!"

"No." "What's wrong with it?" I asked suspiciously. "Nothing."

"No way, there's gotta be if you want that little for it!" "You wanna test drive it?"

"Sure!" He quickly handed me a flashing red pyramid. I looked it over quickly enough and felt it with my hands. I noticed on one side was an indentation of a cross. After it had been in my palm for awhile, it started to flash a bright green.

"What the. . ." "It likes you," the dealer said shaking.

"Well. . . I like it, too," I said hastily and got into that devilish piece of machinery. I shut the door and looked around inside. It was even more beautiful than I had imagined before while looking through the window. I looked at the dealer. He smiled weakly. "What do I do with this?" and held up the pyramid. "Put it in the steering wheel."

I found the place where it fit. . . and it came to life! My heart gave a jump. Its sound was not like any regular car, it was more of a low, constant hum. I felt strange. The dealer ran back to his building as fast as he could go.

I smiled strangely and looked for some kind of shifting lever and I couldn't find one. I stepped on the accelerator, and it moved very quickly and quietly out of the lot and onto the road. I went up the road a ways and turned. I went around the next block and turned. I turned on the radio and found my favorite station. As I sat enjoying the last song that radio would ever play again, I turned into the lot and parked the car. I took the pyramid out of its place and sat in the car with all its devilish beauty.

I turned to look at the dealer. He looked out of the big windows with the look of death on his face. The pyramid flashed green in my hand. The car hummed, it was on. . . and I didn't have the pyramid in its place. The radio played static for what seemed like a couple of days. I felt something was going to happen to me, and it wasn't going to be good. A low, loud voice suddenly jammed all the speakers. "Jason," it laughed. "Who is that?"

"You need not know who I am, but I tell you this: I have seen you walk by me on the sidewalk many times and I have called to you. This time I have succeeded in getting you. Now you belong to me, there is no way out, YOU ARE MINE FOREVER!"

A red light suddenly flashed from inside the car. I didn't know where it came from and I didn't care, I wanted out. The car shook violently as if it were being stretched. The voice kept laughing.

"Let me out," I screamed. My mind screamed, every part of my body screamed, longing for freedom. Its laughter echoed in my mind and the car.

"You will not escape as the others have." I realized who I was up against. "You won't get by me, by God" and pulled out the cross from my pocket. "No," the beast shrieked, "no put it away, it will do no good." I felt thankful that good would come in dire need. I fumbled with the pyramid and found the indentation. I placed the cross very quickly into its place. "No," it screamed.

The door on my side flew off its hinges and landed next to the sidewalk. Without thinking, I put the pyramid and cross in the steering wheel. "No. . . No," it said for its last time. I ran toward the building and turned toward the car to see what would happen. The car wailed and moaned. It started to melt.

A hole formed in the ground by it and it melted and poured itself back to hell. Black smoke spewed up from the hole and soon disappeared. Everything got quiet. I was quiet. The dealer was quiet and thank God the world was quiet, at peace. I had my freedom again. I picked up the door. It wiggled as I carried it over to a junkpile stacked with doors. The door had taken on a weird shape, almost like a face.

I went home and tried for the next four months to forget about the car and THE DOOR. One day, as I walked down the street, I saw a beat-up old junker go by. It had that door on it; the face smiled at me.

It was a dark and rainy night, the sort of night Halloween was meant to be but seldom is. The wind raged outside, and as it went past the north end of the building it let out a scream. Clementina sat in a snuggle sack with her Odie slippers on, diffidently watching Horror Tales From The Dead Beyond The Dark Side Of The Bloody Grave In 3-D Theatre on independent T.V.

She had decided to stay home on Halloween because as she told her roommate, "I don't like getting dressed up in a silly costume!" The truth was, her boyfriend, Milton, had dumped her only four hours before. "It just isn't fair that I'm alone in my residence hall watching Horror Tales From The Dead Beyond The Dark Side Of The Bloody Grave In 3-D while that tramp Sally, who incidentally is as brilliant as mud, is out with my boyfriend," she wailed.

Poor Clementina. And after all that work. She had wanted to go as Dora Copperfield, David's first wife. There would have been a gorgeous Dora, too, with her blond hair in ringlets and her Early Victorian outfit, not to mention her great-grandmother's fan.

"I wonder if Milt balked at going as David Copperfield," lamented Clementina.

"Buck up," said her conscience, "after all, there's no use crying over split Milt."

"That doesn't make me feel any better," bawled Clementina to no one in particular.

Horror Tales From The Dead Beyond The Dark Side Of The Bloody Grave In 3-D was over at 10:30. Since Clementina was an emotional molotov cocktail, she decided to go to sleep. "After all," she said to herself, "Tomorrow is another day." Clementina went to her room on the fourth floor.

As she was unlocking the door, she read the note her roommate had left her on the cute hearts, rainbows, unicorns, and Garfield memo board: "Dear Clem, Just a note to tell you our floor won't be back until long after midnight. Sally (THE Sally) is going as Cinderella and we all want to stick around until she turns back into a wench. So don't watch Horror Tales From The Dead Beyond The Dark Side Of The Bloody Grave In 3-D and don't get scared! Your roommate."

"Scared? The only thing I'm afraid of is that they'll wake me up when they come back," said Clementina to herself, even though she knew perfectly well they would.

Clementina meticulously folded her snuggle sack, tidily put her slippers on her shoe rack, carefully folded back the blankets, cautiously plumped her pillow, and finally got into bed. She sailed off to sleep in little time, if any. About 2 a.m., the wind picked up and the lonely, solitary scream turned into a team-scream with a vengeance. Clementina woke up.

"Rather sounds like the crowds at Duran Duran concerts," she mumbled. She rolled over to see if her roommate was awake. She saw that her roommate wasn't back. "That's funny," said Clementina, "it's almost 2 a.m. and my roommate isn't back." She listened. "I don't hear anyone; the whole wing must not be back. Oh well, I'll drift back to sleep." She decided to drift because sailing always made her sick.

Just as she was reaching the point of sleeping soundly, she heard a noise. "Something's scratching on my window. Must be some branches. I'll tell a custodian about it tomorrow," Clementina decided. She closed her eyes. As soon as she'd closed them, she opened them again and froze.

"That noise couldn't be branches. I'm on the fourth floor. None of the trees are taller than the second floor," thought Clementina. She was petrified with fright. She rolled over and hit the desk intercom.

"This is Clementina on the fourth floor. Someone's scratching on my window," whispered our heroine. She waited. There was no reply. "This is Clementina on fourth. Something's scratching on my window." Once again, nothing.

She was debating what to do. Just as she had decided to go to the desk, someone began to unlock her door. She hadn't heard any voices or footsteps in the hallway. "I'm in some mess," thought Clementina. Once again she tried the desk.

"This is Clementina on the fourth floor. Something's at the window and someone's at the door," she shouted in a quiet voice.

Just then the door flew open. The figure at the door laughed cruelly, "Ah ha ha haa."

"Aaaaaaaa," screamed Clementina. Her voice had the force of a thousand Barry Manilow fans. The door began to close as a hand reached into the darkness. . .

The lights flicked on. "Clem, it's me, your roommate." Clementina stared at her in uncomprehending horror.

"The wing and I thought it would be real funny to frighten you a little since it's Halloween and all."

Clementina continued to stare. "Uh, some guys underneath us on the third floor used their pool cues to scratch on the window. Everyone else is down at the desk."

EARTHBOUND

Hall of Fame dedicated

by Timothy Byers
Environmental Editor

Some of you may have noticed a new structure a-building in the CNR building's east lobby the last couple of weeks. I'll admit to a little curiosity as I saw holes being drilled, frames put up, and the faceboards nailed on. My speculation was ended last Friday when the words Wisconsin Forestry Hall of Fame were fastened onto one rounded corner (incidentally just in time for the dedication ceremony).

Three men from Wisconsin forestry history were inducted into the hall at its dedication. The men were Edward Merriam Griffith, the "father of Wisconsin forestry"; Robert Goodman, founder of Goodman Lumber Company; and Fred Wilson, a retired forester from Madison. Only Mr. Wilson is still alive and he attended the ceremony.

At the turn of the century, Wisconsin was reeling in the aftermath of the ruthless exploitation of the Great Lakes pine-ries. The "boundless" forest which once covered much of the land was altered drastically. Problems of fire and land-use were in debate throughout the state. Edward Griffith became Wisconsin's first state forester during this rocky time and held the post from 1904 to 1915.

Griffith fought for new ideas and practices in forestry to help the ravaged land. He wanted forests managed as a renewable crop. He pushed for a forest fire control program, but the pressures of farmers who were after the newly-cleared lands were too great to resist. Farmers struggled, with uneven success, for years with the poor soils. Griffith left his post in 1915, dissatisfied with progress made and frustrated with the agricultural battles. He never returned to Wisconsin but had left a legacy behind.

A new breed of forester was emerging as a result of Griffith's tutelage. The days of cut-out and get-out had scarred Wisconsin. Griffith's foresters had a more caring relationship with the land they were charged to protect. Their task was to reforest the countryside and provide a resource base for the future. Their success is evident today.

Robert Goodman of Marinette County was another posthumous inductee on Friday. Goodman founded the Goodman Lumber Company. He was one of the first owners to restrict the practice of clearcutting on his company's tracts. He favored instead the practice of selection cutting, that is taking out only certain trees, allowing the rest to remain. In this way the forest could be managed in a sustained manner rather than the exploitation of previous years.

Fred Wilson, at 97, is the only charter member of the hall still alive. He spoke to the assembled 75 or so people and reminded them of what it was like in those early days. The soil and the climate were factors against the success of the early farmers. Many of them didn't make it and the land began the long process of secondary succession, nature reforesting its losses. However, the economic burden

Farmers in the south are calling it the invasion of the birds. They are referring to the exploding population of cattle egrets. The birds got their name because they can be found perched on cattle's backs where they eat insects disturbed by the grazing animals. A freshly plowed field is also a favorite spot for a cattle egret. In the upturned soil the birds find beetles and grasshoppers. It is believed that the population increase is due to the fact that the birds have discovered the availability of insects in agricultural fields.

Reduced lighting is the Energy Department's new energy saving proposal. The program calls for new commercial and federal office buildings to cut back on lighting by 25 percent. This effort would reduce energy use. Presently lighting consumes about 40 percent of an office building's total energy bill. Some doctors are concerned that employee's eyes would be affected by less light which would lower productivity.

Foreign predators are removing U.S. wildlife. Black marketers from Europe, Asia and Mexico have created successful businesses that rely on the taking of American endangered species. Poachers receive up to $40 for a single tail feather of bald or golden eagles. These are made into Indian head dresses which sell for $7,000-$9,000 in France and West Germany. Fifty-nine people have been arrested by undercover agents in connection with the poaching and trafficking of eagle feathers. Koreans hire big game hunters to kill bears. The animals' gall bladder brings up to $3,000 for the poacher. The bladders are sold in apothecary shops in Korea. Officials continue to search for illegal slaughter and trade of animals.

Oil prospectors are busy buying lease rights from Midwest land owners. They are hoping that a recent discovery of a rift valley is holding great reserves of oil. The five mile deep rift valley runs from western Lake Superior south to the Minnesota-Wisconsin border and continues across Iowa and Nebraska into Kansas. Some specialists believe that the deposits are too old to hold oil. Others feel more optimistic and await further study.

If oil is found in great quantities some say it could mean energy independence for America.

Rain with a pH of 3.8 fell in Duluth, Minnesota this month. The Minnesota Pollution Control Agency has been measuring rain acidity for five months. They report that the recent rain fall was 63 times more acid than normal rain. Normal rain has a pH of 5.6. This acid rain seems to be the result of nitric and sulfuric oxide emissions from vehicles and industry.

The Wisconsin Environmental Decade sponsored a five kilometer run last Sunday. The run celebrated the one year anniversary of the resignation of James Watt. The Decade feels that the former Secretary of the Interior's resignation was one of environmentalist's biggest victories. Mr. Watt was invited to participate but declined.

Wisconsin's Governor Earl has been criticized for some environmental actions. Environmentalists are upset with Governor Earl's opposition to soil conservation proposals. Earl believes that mandatory farm regulations have not been successful in the past and will not work in regards to soil conservation. The administration's water protection legislation has also been criticized.

Northwestern timber companies received news last week that President Reagan signed a bill that allows them to buy out of their contracts with the government. Agreements were made to cut trees on land managed by the Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management in the late 1970s. Because the building boom has ended, it would not be profitable for timber companies to fulfill their contracts. This bail-out will cost the government from $100-$400 million in lost revenues.

Ninety-four pilot whales were found dead and dying in the shallow flats off Eastham, Mass. It is not unusual for a whale to become beached if it is sick or dead, but these animals seemed to be different. The pilot whales travel in a herd following a male leader. It is theorized that their leader was sick and led the others to the beach. Other scientists believe that the whales might have gotten off course because of intense magnetic fields in the area. The magnetic field could have disoriented the whales who are believed to be able to feel its force. All of the animals were buried near

by Christopher Dorsey

This past weekend, for those of you who weren't aware, was the opening of the 1984 pheasant season. Although less heralded than Wisconsin's whitetail season, the Wisconsin pheasant still commands a fairly avid following of hunters. Probably nowhere was this more evident than on the numerous public hunting areas throughout Wisconsin.

I opened the 1984 season at the Mud Lake Wildlife Area in southern Columbia County. Mud Lake happens to be only a few miles from the State Game Farm near Poynette where roughly 50,000 rooster pheasants are raised annually. These pheasants are stocked throughout Wisconsin public hunting grounds each fall on weekly intervals. Yes, Mud Lake had its proportional allotment of pheasants.

Pulling up to the King Road access to Mud Lake was quite a spectacle. For nearly a quarter mile, cars were parked along the shoulders on both sides of the road. Dogs, people and shotguns were everywhere. At no time had I ever seen such hunter densities. Not even deer or waterfowl season compared with this concentrated army of hunters.

As I stepped out of my brother's Datsun, I began to wonder about the safety of this many people hunting so close. With this in mind, I opted to exchange my brown game vest for a more obvious blaze orange windbreaker. Also, I quickly grabbed my large brimmed hunting cap so as to protect my eyes from falling BB's which were certain to pelt us.

Pheasant season opens at noon. At 11:56 a.m. the first shot echoed from beneath the hill. In the ensuing moments, dozens of shotgun blasts echoed through the valley like some kind of a war zone. Wanting to avoid as much as possible the main gauntlet of hunters, my brother, his friend Don and I headed toward a thick ravine. Our hope was that the dense blackberry foliage would discourage other hunters from choosing the same course. Unfortunately, seeing that we were also in the company of a dog, other hunters followed only a few yards behind tumbled to the ground much to the chagrin of the spectating hunters behind us. We hunted for another hour and bagged our limit of three birds (one apiece) before making an exit back to the Datsun.

Following the hunt, I reflected on the day's activities. Did I really enjoy hunting these birds which have spent their entire life under chickenwire? Was

us. At this point, I began to wonder why I even bothered to come here.

Less than 15 minutes into the hunt, my setter began working a small patch of grass-filled sumac with the nervous stalk of a veteran pointer. Moments later, he froze on a staunch point. Like vultures over a carcass, hunters on the hillside noticing the pointing setter hovered ever closer to us in the hopes our shots would be errant and would afford them shooting at the bird.

At this point, I was angered at the hunters for displaying such sleazy methods in their quest at getting a pheasant. I wondered why they had even bothered trying to pheasant hunt without a dog. Nevertheless, I motioned to Bob to quickly make the flush and in one quick shot the bird merely shooting live targets all I was after? What about the quality of hunting? These questions began to wear on me. Have we, as sportsmen, lost sight of the importance of sportsmanship? I also wondered why the DNR created a situation like that which I encountered at Mud Lake. The department spends some $500,000 annually to operate their State Game Farm. These birds are not released for restoration efforts, but are released solely for hunters to shoot.

By releasing pheasants in high densities on relatively small hunting areas, the department is only encouraging "slob" hunting methods. My hope is that a review of their (DNR) pheasant

River Bill

Earthbound

Washington, D.C. — A long term-program to provide for the environmental management of the Upper Mississippi River has been approved by the Senate, Senator Bob Kasten (R-Wis) said today.

The environmental management program for the Upper Mississippi River will include: fish and wildlife habitat rehabilitation and enhancement; soil erosion control; upland watershed management; and a detailed analysis of the environmental conditions of the Upper Mississippi River.

The program to protect the Mississippi River was included in Senate legislation providing appropriations for fiscal year 1984. These environmental management provisions were not included in the House-passed version of this legislation, but was added to the Senate bill.

"I am very pleased that we can take this major step to protect the unspoiled sections of the Mississippi river," Kasten said. "The quality of this river is very important to Wisconsin and I am glad we can now move forward to assure its protection," the Senator added.

The Upper Mississippi River is a vital link in the life cycle of nearly three-fourths of the nation's migrating waterfowl. In addition, recreational uses of the river directly contribute over $234 million to the local economy each year.

The Senate provisions will now go to conference with the House.

"I am confident we will be able to correct the deficiencies in the House version of this bill and adopt a strong program to protect our river before Congress adjourns," Kasten said.

One hundred zoos in the U.S. have become involved in a species survival plan. The project is an effort to protect endangered species from becoming extinct. Directors hope that they can keep breeding populations of animals alive in captivity while their natural habitat continues to be destroyed. Plans are to reestablish the populations in about 200 years. It is estimated by that time human populations will be stabilized and restoration of animal habitats will be possible. For now, 5,000 animals are being protected in a modern Noah's Ark project.

Soil conservation an active group

by Mindy Schlimgen

The Soil Conservation Society of America, UWSP Student Chapter, is alive and kicking. SCSA on the national, state and university level is involved with the promotion and advancement of good land use and conservation. This year is the 50th anniversary of the soil and water conservation movement with the historical foot-holds initiated near Coon Valley, Wisconsin. The Student Chapter of SCSA is a CNR organization, which offers students an opportunity to learn and gain practical experience in several aspects of soil science.

Meetings are held once every three weeks to update students on current activities and committee developments. At each meeting a professional in related conservation, agricultural, and research fields presents a current topic accompanied by valuable information into the job market. Past speakers have been individuals working for the UW Experimental Stations, County Land Conservation Districts, Fertilizer Plants, the Soil Conservation Service, UW Extension, faculty members, graduate, and undergraduate students. The club membership averages 30-40 people, so these meetings allow a casual (often comical) atmosphere and a chance to meet professionals one on one. The activities SCSA is involved with are represented by the committees.

The Soil Judging Committee is a group of students that meet about once a week to develop skills in characterizing physical properties of different soils and their association with the landscape. This is excellent experience for students who wish to pursue soil mapping careers or gain knowledge that can be widely applied to other fields such as forest management, soil conservation, or watershed management. The teams compete on the state level in early fall, the regional level in late fall, and the national or NACTA contest in the spring. This year the state meet was at Madison and the regionals will be in L'Anse, Michigan. In past years the NACTA contest has been held in Texas, Indiana, and Iowa, and UWSP has on occasion brought home the national individual title.

In addition to Soil Judging there are other committees that deal with crop judging, potting soil, soil testing, and the Fall Banquet.

The Crop Judging Committee coincides with soil judging and deals with crop identification, planting, diseases, and management practices.

The major fund raiser is our potting soil mix-up and sales. Fifteen pound bags of our super-nutritious dirt (secret blend) sell for $1.25 usually twice a semester in the UC-Concourse and is available year-round in Room 105 CNR.

A recent development in past years is the SCSA Soil Testing Service for lawns and gardens. Samples have been collected and will soon be tested for this semester's service. The committee tests for pH, phosphorus, potassium, organic matter, and soluble salts. Then recommendations for fertilizer additions are developed for grasses or the particular plants grown. This service is $2.00 per sample and interested people should pick up information on how to collect a representative soil sample at the SCSA desk.

The major social event for the year is the Fall Banquet at a local restaurant. Last year the famous (yet humble) Dr. Francis Hole entertained young and old with a violinist's musical analogy of earthworms (etc.) and his spry imitation of Terra Loam. This year's banquet promises to be equally entertaining and impressive.

Other social events include the annual cross-country ski party at Dr. Milo Harpstead's farm. Fall and spring picnics are also held in conjunction with other CNR organizations.

All are welcome to participate or inquire about SCSA activities and services. The SCSA desk is located in the back of room 105 CNR.

Green vote possible

by Timothy Byers
Environmental Editor

In 13 days there will be an election. The real blitz is under way as the debates are over and the candidates get down to the home stretch. Next week's Pointer will have the election as its theme. Earthbound will also carry that premise. We'll talk about an area little considered in this year's presidential campaign, the environment. Neither candidate has addressed the issue very strongly for they perceive the public's lack of interest. Jobs, housing starts, the economy, these are all the big topics. Arms control dominates foreign policy discussions. This is one area with clear ties to the environment. We're talking about mass devastation of the earth and its biota. Nuclear winter could accompany our race's end.

It's important to not be paralyzed by too much fear of the nuclear threat so that we forget the other dangers that face us. Toxic waste, contamination of groundwater, deforestation, extinction of species, these problems go on. We find ourselves beset with pleas and requests for aid. We can't answer them all. We can only do the best we can with the few we are able to deal with effectively. The coming election is one of those few opportunities. It's time for a green vote.

West Germany has a potent political bloc which bases their platform on protection of the environment. Here in America we have political action committees from the Sierra Club and Friends of the Earth, to name two. These groups rate candidates on their environmental voting records and back or oppose them accordingly. Concern for future quality of the environment rates highly.

The environment is ever-present. Politics has tended to overlook this topic lately. It's still there, waiting. The decisions we make very soon will have far-reaching effects. Examine the issues. Vote clean. Vote green, as if our continued existence depends on it. It does.

of the failed farmers fell on Wisconsin counties. This is where Fred left his mark and proudly claimed as his finest achievement, "Providing more than two million acres of county (forest) land," from the tax-delinquent properties. A 1929 report Wilson gave to the Legislature was a major impetus in the building of enabling legislation which allowed the state and counties to work together.

It's appropriate that an exhibit to honor foresters finds its home here at UWSP. The College of Natural Resources is the foundation upon which future management responsibility rests. It is important to remember the earlier days, when ecological concerns weren't considered, and the pioneers who brought about the first rumbles of awareness had to fight to get their views accepted. The example of these three men is a good one to follow.

Eagle man correction

by Timothy Byers
Environmental Editor

Last week Earthbound ran an article about Al Harmata, the "Eagle Man." Unfortunately, an error appeared. The Apostle Islands bald eagle study is headed by Project Director Dr. Ray Anderson, a CNR faculty member here at UWSP, and not Charley Sindelar as printed. Mr. Sindelar is an independent working with the project, banding bald eagles in the nest.

The Apostle Islands study is a project for the United States Park Service through the United States Fish and Wildlife Service by Dr. Anderson's team. Dr. Anderson said the research focuses on bald eagle nesting success in the area through examination of food sources both locally and on wintering grounds. Karen Kozie is a student of Dr. Anderson who is working on the project. She is identifying feeding areas and food sources to determine where contaminants are coming from.

Pointers fail in upset bid, fall to Whitewater 24-7

by Phil Janus
Sports Editor

In the world of sports, momentum is always an important factor. With the Pointers coming off a 25-7 Homecoming win and the Warhawks of Whitewater still in shock from a 73-7 beating at the hands of Division I-AA powerhouse Northern Iowa, it seemed that the big "M" was on the Pointer side. Well, momentum or not, when the Warhawks play in the WSUC they always play tough, and this past Saturday was no exception. Under the Dean of WSUC coaches, Forrest Perkins, the Warhawks won their fifth straight conference game 24-7 keeping pace with UW-River Falls atop the conference at 5-0. Going back to last year the Warhawks have now won 11 of their last 12 conference games losing only to UW-RF 22-21 during that span.

The loss dropped the Pointer conference record to 3-2, and into fourth place. The Pointers are now 5-3 overall.

The second conference loss for the Pointers was also the second time this year they have challenged one of the conference's top teams, and also the second time their running game has been all but non-existent.

In the two losses, (also lost to LaCrosse) they have run 60 times for a total of minus 14 yards. Head Coach D.J. LeRoy attributes the rushing troubles his Pointers had to a couple of missed assignments and an experienced Whitewater defense.

"This is the first year we've tried to run consistently, and run blocking takes a while to master. If you miss just one block the play won't work. We need to hold our blocks for a couple of counts, and against an experienced and quick defense like Whitewater's that's hard to do."

The Warhawks opened the scoring midway through the first quarter when place-kicker Joel Gmak connected on a 45 yard field goal giving UW-W the early edge. The aggressive Pointer defense held tough the remainder of the half allowing the highly explosive Whitewater offense just one touchdown, that coming with 2:28 left in the first half. Mike Miller, the WSUC's leading rusher, accounted for the score when he bulled over from the one yard line. Although the Warhawk offense rolled up 404 yards of total offense, (219 in the first half) LeRoy was pleased with his defense.

"The defense played exceptionally well. Whitewater has an All-Conference backfield (QB Jim Stoppenbach and RB Mike Miller were All-WSUC in '83) and we controlled them pretty well."

In the second half, the defense continued to keep the Pointers in the game by holding the Warhawks scoreless in the third period. The Pointer offense however squandered a couple of scoring opportunities and at the end of the quarter they still trailed 10-0.

Van Asten is 3rd in tackles with 67

The Warhawk offense finally broke down a weary Pointer defense, scoring twice in the final stanza, both on trick plays.

Flanker Bob Mirenda scored the first on a reverse from the 11 yard line giving his team a 17-0 lead, and all but ending any Pointer upset hopes. UW-W lifted their lead to 24-0 when Miller took a pitch from Stoppenbach, rolled to his right and threw 14 yards to a wide open Kelly Silha in the end zone. The reception was Silha's seventh on the day, good for 87 yards.

All told, the Warhawks offense controlled the game and won the Pointer defense out by running 62 plays, and LeRoy felt it was just a matter of time before they broke loose.

"We controlled them well, but they're so talented that eventually they're going to put points on the board."

According to LeRoy, the score was not indicative of the final score, and he wasn't totally displeased with his team's play.

"Whitewater is a very good team, and if you look at them overall I'd pick them to win the conference. We played better than we did against LaCrosse, but we just couldn't get the big play to give us the spark."

Things don't get any easier for the Pointers this weekend as they try to play the spoiler against the Falcons in River Falls. With just three conference games remaining, and trailing the leaders by two games, the Pointers are all but eliminated from the title chase, but they can still have a say in who wins it. In order to upset the Falcons and dim their title hopes, LeRoy says he'll need another strong defensive effort and a big play offense.

"We're going to have to control the wishbone. I think they're the number one rushing team in the conference and we've got to play aggressively and pursue well on defense if we're going to stop them. Offensively we've got to come up with a couple of big plays. We're just a couple of plays away from beating the top teams in the conference, and if we can come up with those plays we can win."

Credited with gridders of the week from the Whitewater game were fullback Mike Rueterman, linebacker Mike Van Asten, and kick returner Rick Wieterson.

Wieterson helps the Pointers in many ways

Rueterman accounted for 69 of the Pointers 204 yards on offense, running for 28 and catching two passes for 41. Rueterman's '84 totals now stand at 529 yards rushing, (3.9 yards per carry) and 220 receiving. Along with leading the team in rushing, he also leads the team in scoring with 48 points.

Van Asten led the Pointer defense with a whopping 15 tackles, 12 of which were solos. For the year, the senior from Little Chute is the third leading tackler with 67, 28 of which are solos.

Wieterson, who is also a mainstay in the defensive backfield, was honored for running back two kickoffs for 65 yards. The senior from Edgerton has returned eight kickoffs this year for 145 yards. At cornerback Wieterson also has four interceptions to his credit so far this season.

Game time Saturday is scheduled for 2 p.m. and can be heard locally on WSPT.

Lady netters finish season at 9-7

by Kent Walstrom

4 singles match.

Along with Loomans, No. 3 Lisa Brunner and Lori O'Neill,

No. 6, also drew praise from Nass while adding straight set victories in their singles matches. Said Nass, Brunner and O'Neill controlled their matches and won big through intelligent shot selection." O'Neill ended the season with an impressive 10-4 mark in the No. 6 singles division.

The Pointers, who have had an outstanding season with their doubles teams, faltered against Oshkosh, which won two of the three doubles matches to clinch the win.

"We are not a strong singles team," admitted Nass, "so our only real chance in beating other teams consistently is to be able to take control in the doubles events."

Lisa Brunner and Jodie Loomans teamed up to win the lone doubles match for the netters with a close 6-3, 2-6, 6-4 decision in the No. 2 seeded contest.

Following the loss to Oshkosh,

Nass looked with optimism at what he felt was a pretty good year.

"We wanted to take a team that had a 5-9 record a year ago and turn them into winners (this year)," said Nass. "It has happened. The women made it happen. In the sport of tennis, that kind of turnaround in a one-year period represents a major accomplishment."

While Nass is the first one to point out the potential of his team, he is also quick to realize the talent the Pointers will face in the conference tournament.

"Conference is a whole new ball game," Nass explained. "It's like preparing for a different season of competition."

Although there is no way for Nass to predict a tourney finish for his team, he did concede that his netters have a real opportunity to surprise some teams, concluding that, "We're a dark horse team with a good chance to pull off some upsets."

Play begins Friday in Madison and will continue until Sunday afternoon.

Lady runners prepare for conference meet

by Alan Lemke
Staff reporter

"A super race" is the way UW-Stevens Point women's cross-country coach Len Hill described the effort of his team at Carthage College Saturday. The women took third place in a meet that Hill said was used mainly to fine-tune his runners for next week's conference meet. The Pointers finished behind UW-Milwaukee and Wheaton College.

The Lady Pointers were led by Cathy Ausloos who grabbed sixth place with a time of 17:50. Rounding out the Pointer top five were Beth Gossfeld in 12th, Andrea Berceau in 22nd, Kathi Seidl in 30th, and Mary Koskey in 44th.

Hill pointed out that this race was a three-mile race compared to the five kilometer races they are used to running. He said for this reason it was hard to compare times to other races they had run.

"What I did was take this and project it to a 5K race and everybody was 30 to a minute and 34 seconds better than their personal record," Hill said. Cathy Ausloos, who will be "Runner of the Week," bettered her personal record by 52 seconds.

The race wasn't the only excitement the team had for the day. It seems that when they arrived at Quandt Gym Saturday morning there was no van available. Hill was finally able to get some cars but they were still 45 minutes late arriving at Carthage. Hill said this did create some minor problems.

"When we got there we had less than half an hour for them to warm up, stretch and tour the course. Usually we figure a minimum of one hour to do all this before the race. They didn't get a chance to tour this course.

They kind of went in to it blind, but they went in with an attitude that they were going to run well."

Looking back over the past few weeks, Hill said he felt it was the increased training for speed that helped the women run as fast they did Saturday.

"This week we went to speed workouts and this is starting to show. It's just all starting to come together which is the way it should go," Hill cited this as the reason that so many of the women are beating their old personal records.

The Pointers were able to beat UW-Oshkosh, but Hill noted that Oshkosh did not run all their regulars. He was pleased though, with the way his girls ran against the few regulars Oshkosh did run.

"They ran a couple of their top people and we beat those people. They're now kind of realizing that they can run with Oshkosh and the top people. If we can get a few more people in there, which will be tough because Oshkosh is favored over us in the conference, but if we have our race and go out hard we can beat them."

Besides the condition of Kris Hoel, which is still questionable, Hill feels his team is ready for the conference meet.

"They're going to be ready. We have some special activities planned for the week to help them get mentally prepared. We'll run hard one more time and then basically we're going to taper so they'll be ready."

Hill said he has no special strategy for Saturday's conference meet, but he says if Oshkosh goes out hard, his team will have to go out hard along with them.

"We'll have to go out with them one on one and hope we can get in front of them."

He sees his team as being in a position of battling for third place with Oshkosh in the conference meet. Hill believes that La Crosse and Eau Claire will take the one and two spots.

Pointers Harriers back in form

by Alan Lemke
Staff Reporter

The UW-Stevens Point men's cross-country team finally snapped out of their slump with a fourth place finish Saturday at Carthage College. Fourth place may not sound very good, but in a field of 24 teams, men's coach Rick Witt felt that was a very good showing.

"I thought the guys ran a good race overall, but we had problems with the finish. Some of the guys lost some places in the last mile, which is usually our strongest part of the race. I kind of have to take the blame for that because we had two very hard days of work this week and I think they may have been just a bit tired going into the race, and this showed up in the last mile."

Don Reiter was able to lead the Pointer pack with a fifth place finish. He was followed by teammates Chris Celichowski in 13th, Arnie Schrader in 17th, Mike Butscher in 40th and Jim Kowalczyk in 49th.

Witt had no explanation for why his team ran better this week, but simply felt they were due.

"I didn't say anything to them because I knew the problem was with their attitudes and that's something they have to straighten out on their own. They sat down and had a meeting between themselves the other day and I think they came up with the conclusion that they would have to be the ones that turned things around."

The Pointers will be heading into the conference meet in two weeks and Witt says he feels his squad is just about where they should be at this point.

"As far as injuries go, we still have a few problems, but they seem to be coming along. We kept Don Grogan out of the race this week because he's been bothered by a sore leg, but that bad ankle of Fred Hohensee's is starting to get stronger. Fred finished 52nd this week so he's not that far off that pack any more. I know he's not where he wants to be right now but he'll be ready to go when conference rolls around."

Another promising finish Witt noted in the race was that of Mike Butscher. Witt is hoping Mike will be able to round out his top runners for the conference meet.

"I was real pleased with the way Mike ran. He would have finished better, but he was one of the guys that lost some spots in that last mile. I think Mike will be able to help us a lot, but we have to get Fred and some of the other top guys to run in those four and five spots. Mike will come through for us, but it's too much to make him run up in the fourth position."

OUTDOOR SPORTSMAN

Flocks were flying few and far between

by Rick Kaufman
Senior Editor

In every person's life there is a sport, hobby or special interest, if you will, that engulfs their passions. Raised in a very outdoor oriented family, mine happens to be hunting. Whether it be deer, squirrel, duck, goose or pheasant, you can find me feverishly taking part in each open season.

This year was no different, except for missing opening day, I was joined by my good friends, brothers Mark and Doug Jarzynski, on a planned hunt in the week-old duck season.

In the pre-dawn darkness our canoe, laden with decoys and shotguns, was gliding swiftly and silently across the glass-like lake. We were headed for our blind 50 yards across the open, prime duck waters.

Except for the continuous swishing of the oar, our quiet ride covered the short distance within minutes. While I busily prepared the blind, straightening the wild rice stalks which served as our camouflage, Mark and Doug set to work systematically placing the two dozen decoys in a pattern to attract the wary waterfowl.

Our excited expectations rose as the first hint of light broke above the horizon. We could hear the ducks becoming restless in the creek, several yards behind us, that fed the shallow lake. Our blind was set in the wild rice that grew in abundance along the shorelines. The wild rice not only acted as excellent cover for our natural blind setting, but was a duck's delicacy.

Shortly after Mark and Doug's

A swooshing sound is all that signalled a lone teal, probably breaking away from the previous flock, as it folded its wings and dropped with ease into the decoy spread. Sensing something amiss, the duck flapped stretch their wings and search for food. Due to the unusually warm temperatures the area had been experiencing, the abundance of flocks flying were surprisingly small. Our guns rested silently, our hopes dwindled while the morning faded into afternoon.

As suddenly as our expectations dwindled, a flock of mallards appeared from behind us. We crouched in time to watch the mallards fly unwavering overhead. We knew the birds would make several descending passes, establishing a safe and direct route to the spread. Any unnecessary movement or an early attempt to raise up and fire would surely scare the flock. Every opportunity was met with a serious overtone, the chances of bagging our limit were coming few and far between.

A number of passes later, our shotguns readied, the birds came within range. Upon a signal the silent air was broken with a cacophony of blasts and a lone duck dropped from the skies. In terms of averages we were riding a perfect two kills on two attempts. That average dropped considerably within the next hour as we missed several opportune chances.

The highlight of our hunt, other than spending time out in the wild, came when Mark felled a wood duck that appeared out of nowhere. We had been conversing about the poor hunting when the swift moving duck passed, shoulder height, just to the right of the blind. Instinctively Mark grabbed his gun and with one swinging motion followed the course of the fast departing woodie. The guns report sounded and the fatal shot found its mark, the duck tumbled down, dead before it broke water.

return to the blind, a flock of 15 or so teal came unexpectedly from behind us. We were "caught with our pants down," as Mark would later comment, whenever a fast flying flock surprised us.

Several minutes passed with no sight of ducks, but a morning light that revealed an overcast and hazy sky. This is what I cherished the most, a quiet morning enjoying the company of good friends and nature itself.

once and began to fly off. I leveled the barrel on the rapidly rising teal, squeezed the trigger and witnessed the mortally wounded duck break water upon impact.

"Nice shot," was all I heard as a smile broke from my somber face, my first kill of the virgin season.

We knew the early morning hours were the most active for waterfowl. They got up from their overnight resting areas to

Our hunt ended just as soon as it had come, gathering the decoys and storing the shotguns into their cases. We weren't overly successful, but we had each bagged a duck. Paddling across the now rippling lake we had higher hopes for hunts yet to come.

policy will lead to changes in the current "put and take" system. Hunter apathy will likely mean disaster for the native Wisconsin pheasant. Only through increased sportsman awareness and input can there be any hope for improved pheasant hunting.

also knew that if he wanted to climb the corporate ladder at Post he should drop the conversation immediately.

"Uh, nice weather we're having," he said lamely. Bill Sinclair smiled. "Yeah, it sure is," he answered.

Sucra-7 had been test-marketed all right, Sinclair thought as he poured water on the sauna's searing rocks. As a matter of fact, O.J. probably tried it this morning in that box of Alpha Bits he had placed in the cupboard. He didn't particularly like the idea of using his son as a guinea pig, but it was one way to avoid the bothersome FDA and their bureaucratic rules. Only a few of the 200 rats they tested it on had died, and that was good enough for him and the rest of the folks at Post. Their lab technicians could fudge the human test results, and in a few months Sucra-7 would be battling Nutra-Sweet for artificial sweetener superiority.

Jo and Bill were at St. Bartholomew's potluck supper, when O.J.'s and his babysitter for the evening, Cindy Kaufman, returned from a sumptuous dinner at McDonald's. O.J. hated Cindy more than any babysitter he had. She never let him stay up late like Laurie and Sue, she spent all her time on the phone and wouldn't play with him, and worst of all she wouldn't let him watch the "Dukes of Hazzard" because she wanted to watch "Love Boat."

O.J. tried to smooth out the rocky relationship by offering to play his Centipede video game with her, but Cindy was more interested in talking to her boyfriend Freddy. O.J. fumed as he blasted away at the undulating insect on the screen, timing his blasts with each of Cindy's giggles as if the lasers could silence her.

"I'm gonna watch some TV, o.k.?" O.J. said as he switched on the family console.

"What time is it?" Cindy said glancing at her wrist. "Eight-oh-five. Sorry, O.J. baby, I just gotta watch the 'Love Boat.'" She grabbed the remote control switch from him and flicked the button just in time to catch the first smooch.

O.J. had had enough. He ran, crying, into his room. He threw himself on his bed, then screamed with pain. The spoon he had used for breakfast cereal creased his left cheek, but not hard enough to draw blood. O.J. grabbed the spoon, preparing to hurl it in frustration, when he got a fiendish idea.

"Why don't I eat Cindy," he thought to himself as he gazed at the empty spot on his dresser where Darth Vader once stood menacingly. He padded downstairs quietly and snuck up behind Cindy. She was immersed in a load of saccharin romanticism heavy enough to sink any ship, except the "Love Boat."

"Kin I have a bowl of cereal," O.J. asked coyly.

"Uh, sure. Sure, go ahead," Cindy replied without looking at him.

He grabbed the Alpha-Bits out of the cupboard and nearly killed himself straining to reach the milk in the refrigerator. As he sat at the counter watching the Alpha Bits soak in their milky bath, O.J. scoured the bowl for five letters: C-I-N-D-I.

He looked at the word, opened his mouth with a restrained giggle and munched. Nothing happened. O.J. sat disappointed for a few minutes, then walked over to Cindy.

"Cindy, how do you spell your name?" he inquired.

"Huh? What... Why do you?"

"Uh... Cindy C-I-N-D-Y," she stammered, not wanting to miss the show's predictable climax.

"Y!" O.J. piped as he ran back to the kitchen.

Cindy Kaufman shook her head and rolled her eyes to the heavens. O.J. shook his bowl, looking for the needed letters. He spelled her name for the second time: "C-I-N-D-Y," he said, carefully placing each letter on the spoon. Raising the utensil to his mouth, O.J. plunged it in with mischievous spite, then savored his triumph. The cereal was still in his mouth when he tore into the living room looking for Cindy. She was nowhere to be found.

O.J. ran around the house, calling her name. The family dog, Spock, followed him around. Spock wasn't credited with being a terribly bright dog, but as O.J.'s constant shadow he'd seen him get angry at an awful lot of people. But even he could recognize that somehow this episode was different from past conflicts. O.J. had wanted a bigger human to disappear, and she had.

Exhausted by his happily unfruitful search for Cindy, O.J. went to bed. His parents arrived home a few hours later, and thought Cindy had simply returned home for the night. Usually she remained there until they returned, but they were out an hour or so later than expected.

"She probably just went home," said Bill as he crawled in bed.

"I hope so," Jo said as she pulled the comforter over her shoulders.

As the Sinclairs would soon become painfully aware, Cindy Kaufman never returned home that night. Police and volunteer search crews combed the White Plains area for evidence of her disappearance, but none could be found. The upper-middle-class community initially felt unthreatened by her disappearance, figuring it was an isolated case. But when several more children in the community mysteriously disappeared, the community became panic-stricken.

The city fathers imposed a dawn to dusk curfew to protect their children and even instituted voluntary neighborhood watches.

Spock had watched in mute horror as O.J. paraded around his room with a list of other students he was going to "eat." Jimmy Jensen's name, crossed out with several lines, headed the top of the list. He had vanished three weeks ago, just after he and O.J. had gotten in a fight during a kickball game. Sally Johnson could not be found after telling the principal at St. Bartholomew's, Sister Josetta, that O.J. had laughingly called her a "bitch." The list went on, seven names in all.

Billy put the list on his dresser, grabbed his baseball glove, and headed downstairs. He grabbed his Yankees baseball jacket and headed toward the door.

"Not so fast young man," Jo called from the kitchen. Leaning over the kitchen counter, the last rays of sunshine dancing across her face, Jo looked at O.J.'s dimpled face.

"I'm sorry, honey, but I can't let you go outside—what with all the disappearances and all," she said.

"But, Mom, I'll be o.k., I'll just go as far as John's house and..."

"No," she said firmly.

"You're not going anywhere."

"But..."

"No buts..."

"You said I could," he reminded her.

"That was before I knew when you were going," she countered.

"But you promised," O.J. whined, tears rolling down his face.

"No! And that's final—I don't want to hear another word."

"Can I have a bowl of cereal?" O.J. said clenching his teeth.

"Honey, you just got done eating an hour..."

"Pleeeeeease..." he pleaded.

Jo looked at him. Her "little slugger" stood there with untied shoelaces, his tiny belly protruding sloppily over the waistband of his worn jeans. "He's a growing boy," she reasoned finally.

"Well, o.k., O.J. But just one bowl. We'll have to put you on a diet soon," she said as she tugged his cap, poked his belly and kissed him on the forehead in a smooth action only mothers could follow.

O.J. sat himself down as his mother set the Alpha-Bits before him. He eagerly poured the cereal, watching a chalky powder settle in the bowl. He tossed the empty box aside, grabbed the milk and poured it on the cereal. He giggled as he reached for the two letters he'd need: J-O.

His mother walked into the butler's pantry to put away some dishes. Spock sat next to O.J. He sensed the boy was angry with his mother the same way he'd been angry with the babysitter. Spock started jumping on O.J. just as his master was lifting the two letters to his mouth.

"Down, boy," O.J. screamed, giving Spock a shove that sent him sliding across the parquet floor. The letters swirled in the spoon.

As the dog struggled to regain his footing on the slippery floor, O.J. swallowed hard. Then he disappeared.

Folks in White Plains still remember O.J. Sinclair as the last kid to disappear that awful fall. They cried with his parents during the funeral. But no one cried when Spock died a few months later. No one knew that his leap had knocked O.J.'s spoon hand just enough to cause a mini-whirlpool in that oversized spoon. Just enough to make those two letters, J-O, fall into a slightly different order.

severe automobile accidents. He has seen accidents with one person involved and up to as many as 14 where nine had died. Last summer, he was a front seat passenger in a head-on collision at 60 mph with another auto. He walked away unharmed. The others were not so lucky. He came to me after his accident.

He wanted to know why he had seen more newly dead people than the average Vietnam veteran. I told him I didn't know why. Upon closer observation of Kristopher, I found that because of his frequency with it (death), the gory sights and sounds and smells that often surround a terrible automobile accident, he has become very superficial in comparison to the spiritual events that had taken place.

He has told me under hypnosis that immediately after an accident there is a Spirit that appears that does nothing but summon more spirits until there are hundreds.

The summoned spirits are neither good spirits nor bad. They are bounty hunters, and sea-vengers, vagabonds and spirits in transit. They fight fiercely among themselves for the right of the newly dead and wait patiently for the dying to expire.

Contrary to popular belief that one's soul rises out of the body after death, Kristopher has witnessed spirits entering a newly dead body through any number of orifices (i.e. mouth, nose, ears, eyes, anus, vagina, penis, and any open abrasion, cut or laceration) to exhume and flagellate the soul into submission.

The spirits are very visible to him and highly active in the presence of police, onlookers and medics. They do not deter from their activities.

The time element involved varies depending on the strength of the soul newly dead and the quantity of dead.

The case in point, gentlemen, has led me to believe that it is not just the dying who are about to expire and for some reason return to life that experience these horrifying events, but also persons who come in immediate contact with the newly dead, such as doctors, medics, police and soldiers. They have all blindly witnessed these events of the supernatural.

Clementina began sobbing with relief and anger. "Oh, you're sooo funny, you thought I was really scared?" She called the desk again, "Come on up, the joke's over."

"I'm just fine, really," said Clementina to her roommate, but 'just wait until next year' is what she thought.

Vet Club is led mainly by four people. Our adviser is Dr. Kent Hall. He provides us with a wealth of knowledge and near limitless experience. The three student officers are John Bennett, President; Mark Hogenson, Vice-President; and Andrew Radomski, Secretary-Treasurer.

There are 25 members in our club. Membership is obtained simply by attending our meetings. Anyone who has the slightest interest in veterinary medicine is recommended to come to our meetings. For those who wish to find out more about vet club, please contact either Dr. Hall or one of the student officers. The knowledge to be gained may be invaluable.

Nontraditional Student Office

by Teri Lyon

In March, 1984, UWSP made a commitment to non-traditional students by opening an office in Room 106 of the Student Services Center. Margaret Kocurek, coordinator, fills a part-time position with that office and the Office of Continuing Education and Outreach under the direction of Orland Radtke, Director of Continuing Education and Outreach.

Kocurek considers herself "a liaison between non-traditional students and the university." She said she enjoys and takes seriously her task of helping students with any of their concerns about returning to college.

The university's definition of non-traditional students is "those who have experienced a break in their education or who now wish to begin a collegiate education and are over 25 years of age." Kocurek cited concerns about child care, parking, scheduling and finances as common among "non-trads."

In addition to Kocurek, the office employs three peer advisors who make themselves available 16 hours a week to supply information and assurance to any "non-trads" who are seeking help. This semester there are 900 of these students on campus taking six or more credits.

The Wisconsin Assessment Center, Green Bay, conducted a survey from 1980-1983 on the adult student. The findings were: three-fourths of adults in degree programs are 25-34 years old, women outnumber men two to one; two-thirds had attended college in the past; work, family and financial responsibilities kept 60 percent of the adult students from enrolling earlier. These are also the reasons why they discontinued education.

Adults proceeded through college at a fast pace, averaging almost a full course load per semester. Adults who graduated found the college experience positive; 98 percent said they would return if they had it to do over again. Half reported increases in job responsibility, pay status, and/or job security as a result of their college degree.

Of homemakers who returned to college, 80 percent were employed full-time or part-time after graduation. Their academic skills compared favorably with those of younger students, except in mathematics. Study habits showed more similarities than differences to those of younger students. Eighty-one percent at UW Centers transferred almost immediately to four-year institutions upon completion of a two-year course of study.

personals

PERSONAL: Let the good times roll this summer in Europe. You know who this applied to, you lazy bums would rather get intimate with sheep. So don't let your quads soften, get your cushy little tush on an avocado and pedal.

PERSONAL: TECA: When are we going to Greece? If we can't afford it we could always settle for Hollywood and the seven hour red sunsets for a substitute! These guys are no roomies. Is a road trip in order? Fluffy.

PERSONAL: To the obnoxious Roach Head: Your radio broadcasts are unwanted. Stop or choose your spickets. We have a big fire and enough Point Beer to roast both you and buttjams and Grunt. Thanks, Supreme Council.

PERSONAL: Hey Goomba! Who could ask for more than seven hours and V-8?!! I heard two hours and a rookie is a great substitute. It's worth a try!! Shawna.

PERSONAL: Schnookump-face: Thanks for a great editorial idea. You are one awesome dude! You flaming personals star you!! Sweetums.

PERSONAL: Spoon: Remember, "build bridges with words instead of walls with words." Or is this no longer pertinent?

PERSONAL: Hi ya Cutie: "Old King Cole was a merry old soul with a buck shin hider and a paper asshole." What do you think of that one, Dawn? Alphonse.

PERSONAL: Karin & Kathy: Red-neck blondes are great! Thanks for enlightening my life — call again anytime! P.F.

PERSONAL: Thanks for being my best friend, tolerating me, and being there when I need you. Claire Bear.

PERSONAL: Lili: Poke! Your ex-roomie.

PERSONAL: H Short A! (That's you Marianne Bradley). Be prepared. STOUT Study Team shall return and probably to Baldwin. Make sure to send Hollywood and Red to us, you can keep the rest. Well, send Slash to Lisa, she always liked laboratory face. Now that we have your attention, why haven't you been at Buffy's? How can you stay away from namesake? Not to mention us, who else could possibly corrupt you so much? (yes, your hair is six inches shorter now). Miss ya! The other two musketeers. P.S. Come visit for a day, bring vodka!!

PERSONAL: Ann: How about going to Plover? I am sure we can find a car...who needs keys? Your partner in crime. XXXO Ashlyn.

PERSONAL: Do it!! Do it! Now Call Karen or Janet (341-4124) to sublet 2 single rooms. Second semester. Only 4 blocks from campus!

PERSONAL: Heather & Jackie: No one can have too many great friends and you guys are the best. You have helped me a lot. I hope I can reach my goal: with your help I know I can do it. Thank you for everything you've done and what ever you will do in the future. Claire.

PERSONAL: Grunt, who's going to eat you? We don't want AIDS, just a simple roasting, what size spicket do you wear, anyhow? Supreme Council. P.S. Take care of your gastric problems.

PERSONAL: Brian: What happened to your Everlasting Love? I've touched a four leaf clover and nothing swooping. Please park on my dance floor again. Me.

PERSONAL: Attention: SETV wants you! If you've got an interest in T.V., get involved with us. We produce and televise live news, sports, replays, campus issues and your show ideas. Learn as you work. We can do a lot for you. Come in and check us out. Student Experimental Television, 111 CAC. 345-3068.

PERSONAL: Mike Bednorzi: Happy 32nd Birthday! Party it up. Hope it's a real rocking weekend! From: The Girl Who Fantasizes (Guess who?)

PERSONAL: You don't have to be an Accounting, Business or Economic student to be reading this personal. In fact, everyone should know about the 3rd Annual (A.B.E.S.) Winter Banquet on Nov. 17 because everyone is welcome. Guest Speaker is Gary D. Maples from Wisconsin Bankshares and the band will be "Thirsty." Dinner will be held at Bernard's Supper Club. So stay tuned for more details.

PERSONAL: Steven: Thanks for always being so understanding, even though half the time I probably didn't deserve it. Maybe someday I'll get my head on straight. Also, thanks for all the D.Q. walks. Don't forget, I'll always care. Love you too, Pat.

PERSONAL: Toad, someday I'll teach you how to play Mexican the right way. Squirt, get a smaller pair of pants. Those 28's you wore in the parade were just too big to you. Love you all, Sharon — not Sheri.

PERSONAL: To My Little Hockey Player: I Love you, I miss you and I love you.

PERSONAL: Sweetsoot: Please make it back to my sneaker soon! Your Sweetie.

PERSONAL: To My Dearest Tina, the Field Hockey Player: I worship you from afar, at night I stare at the dark trees silhouetted against the quiet stars, I am entranced into a complete peacefulness and my last thoughts are of you. I dream of the nights when I will be staring at your silhouette...thinking of you. A Secret Admirer.

PERSONAL: Hot Item! Two single rooms available second semester. Only 4 blocks from campus! Call Karen or Janet 341-4124.

PERSONAL: Attention: Fantastized about being a star? SETV can help you! You come up with great show ideas and we'll help you produce and direct it. Bring your friends, family, and in-laws. We need your ideas. Come in and check us out. Student Experimental Television, 111 CAC. 345-3068.

PERSONAL: Rehiring to go — Let's row-row-row the boat to the big Wazoo again for more nose cards! XXXO — 1917 —

PERSONAL: To the Bronx: Thanks for being such great friends. Take care of my sweetie for me. It looks like I can't anymore. Luv ya tons! Susie.

PERSONAL: Trevor W: You're our favorite titration genius — self-proclaimed of course — we can't wait to drop acid with you again. With love, Potassium and Hydrogen.

PERSONAL: JuJu: Do you want to dance at Bruisers with me? If so, wear a Limited sweater with a deep "V" in the back. Get psyched for Toronto! Can we please "talk" tonight? Love, Bets.

PERSONAL: Smelly — The A-Team has heard about your sore throat. That's from trying to swallow the bababa all at once, instead of taking a little at a time. We also want to thank you for donating to our "Second Annual Panty-Sniffing Contest." It should be bigger and better than last year's.

PERSONAL: C.P.K. yes, another chance for local recognition! Get psyched for Toronto! Only 27 more days! If you remember to get the ice everything will be o.k. And, make sure you get to bed before 4:30. Love, E.L. 103.

PERSONAL: Jr: Hey Bud — thanks for the terrific week — we had fun. Hope the 3 B's didn't get to you Sunday. What's her name is still climbing the walls... Your friends in crime. Don't "LEAF" us along!!

PERSONAL: A. and M. What is the "Wall of Vain" anyhow?

PERSONAL: Nancy: Thanks for the green pepper. I love having breakfast in bed. Too bad I never stay awake long enough to finish it! See ya at the set. Shen. Beth.

PERSONAL: Ashley (J.A.): Sunday was really fun. We will have to do it again soon. Very Much Ditto (J.A.)

PERSONAL: Dearest KKB: Happy Anniversary Sweetie. The past two years haven't been the gosh darn worstest! In fact, they've been the bestest. I'll always be your TS if you'll always be my SS. Love forever, Punkin.

PERSONAL: Dear Prince: I'm your biggest fan. I have all your records and I play them all three times a day (right before I pray and brush my teeth.) I think you are the greatest thing since carpeting. Anyway, I heard this rumor that you would be in the Encore today and tomorrow with the University Centers Resident halls Video Dance Nights (Allen Center on Friday, South Debot on Thursday). Is it true???? I would just die! Madonna.

PERSONAL: Michael, Welcome back to Stevens Point! Just wanted you to know that I'm really glad you're here. The weekend will be great! I love you, Cath.

PERSONAL: CONGRATULATIONS Rita and Scott!! Love, The 1633 Club.

PERSONAL: Read this if you are from one of the following Dorms: Hyer, Roach, Pray-Sims, Smith, South, Nelson. You are having a party Tomorrow Night! It's the biggest, loudest, clearest Video Dance that you'll ever see! The screen is 15 feet, the sound system, and special effects are state-of-the-art and the music is incredible! Dance till your feet wear off! It will be wild! Don't forget, it's tomorrow night!

PERSONAL: Joan, This last year has been one of the best years of my life and you've made it that way for me. I only hope our relationship continues to grow stronger over the years. Thanks for everything; you mean the world to me. Happy anniversary on the 28th. I love you, Chris.

PERSONAL: "THUTHIE": you gorgeous hunk of freshman flesh! You really ought to come to Hyer for a full physical examination from Dr. Perkins and Dr. Walker.

PERSONAL: Moose: Congratulations on your first successful murder of a furry little creature that ran merrily through the tree tops. Good luck on future hunting sprees. But remember... "If you go out in the woods tonight, you better wear a disguise."

PERSONAL: Cath: Thank for putting up with me, you are "too too cool!" Have a great "Rhedd!" weekend. Love Ya, Amy.

PERSONAL: Gall: Hang in there, everything will work out fine, if not let's "trail on someone." Love you Across the Hall Neighbor.

PERSONAL: Hey Smith Hall Staff. Thanks for a great weekend. It was a needed break and I really had a fun time. Hope we can do it again! Love, Cath.

PERSONAL: Mary — how is your bum leg? Beth.

PERSONAL: Hey Noodle Man: Watch out for clinging bodysuits, especially black ones. And you Uncle Jerry... did she really tell you where you left your watch the night of our B-Street. Pez, how often do you drive white buses? And Renee, what is your favorite number? Dieter, you better change your "spicollized" sheets. Roadtrip to Marshfield... who, us?

PERSONAL: To the women of 1633: Time is wasting as you see, you'd better start your search today, Nov. 18 is not far away.

PERSONAL: BMO: How about another roadtrip to Plover. But... where are the keys??? Hee Hee! You car thief! Guess who?

PERSONAL: Steve, Katie, Mark, Missy, Mo — You have all been great! I can't think of a group of people I would rather work with. You have made my job an experience rather than a chore. Thank you, your HEM at Debot.

PERSONAL: Amy: Hang in there, hon — the weekend's almost here. Relax and get some sleep, dammit! Love, Cath.

PERSONAL: Running out of ideas for Christmas presents? WPRA (Wisconsin Park and Recreation Association) has the answer for you. On Oct. 25, 26, 29 and 30 in the U.C. Concourse and on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1 and 2 in the CNR lobby from 10 a.m.-4 p.m., WPRA will be selling beautiful and unique black and white prints. Come and have a look you may just see one you like!

PERSONAL: PAM: Where are You??? I have not seen you out lately, and I miss you, I lust you and I can't wait until the next time I see you, perhaps at the next moonhead party??? Hopefully Much Sooner, because I want to show you what I got — it's a lot! Your lustful admirer; meet me tonight at Butter's Happy Hour if you dare!!!

PERSONAL: Dear Mel: You are not in any danger but other parties involved may very well be. Best of luck in the future to all of you. Room 217.

PERSONAL: M.A.S. Things are changing! Exciting things to come! This is only the beginning of great things. And you can take that to the bank. Be watchful for new things. Your CEM.

PERSONAL: B.B. Thanks for being such a great housemate and friend. Have a wonderful day! Love ya! D.P.

PERSONAL: 4 West Knutzen Slydaws would just like to say to 1 North Watson. We Will! We Will! Booyah!

PERSONAL: Dear Mom: Happy Birthday! Hope you have a great time celebrating up here at Point. Love ya! From: Daughter No. 2.

PERSONAL: Dear Biking Buddy: Thanks for your concern! Yes, 42 days is a long time.

PERSONAL: KISSY-KISSY: I want to thank you for all the love and support you have given me in our 2½ years of knowing each other. I just want to let you know I can't wait until Nov. 9, 1985. Love, Honey.

PERSONAL: Charmin Darling: I'd love to go out bowling with Fitzgerald for you, but I'm not sure if my nails will be dry! And what if he doesn't understand my roll fetish? (is that sistruple??) Just remember, next time daddy wants me to date the floozy and I already have a date with Skip, you have to date him for me! But I'll let you wear my Floofian dress! Jeanne.

PERSONAL: To the Beautiful women on 4 East Baldwin: We did it — Big Time — Whipple Street was an outstanding success. It was all your hard work and determination. Be proud of yourselves. You made history here at UWSP. Each and every one of you are very special women to have made this happen. It was fantastic!!! Thanks to the best wing on campus!! XOXO Signed Your blonde RA!!! P.S. It was definitely a night to remember. I'll never forget it.

PERSONAL: Hey you snuggling goddess, are you ready for Oshkosh B'gosh? Orees will never be the same, will they? Keep the color green in sight...Don't give up hope yet. By the way...is there fungus among us? Well, if not, let's "study" each other. Watch out for holes in chairs.

PERSONAL: Only 36 more school days left. Finally, after 5½ years, 4 majors, and approximately 19,235 gallons of beer, I'm getting out of here! But where does it all end? Perhaps in Key West in the sun, the sand, and the surf. Ah, the stories we could tell!

PERSONAL: 4 East Baldwin would like to extend their thanks to all of you wonderful people who attended our Whipple Street. We trust you had a fantastic time here on 4 East. We certainly had an enjoyable time meeting all of you. Be sure to watch yourselves tonight at 7 p.m. on SETV.

PERSONAL: Interested in Urban Forestry or just interested? The Student Society of Arboriculture will be having a general meeting on Tues., Oct. 30 at 7 p.m. in the Nicholet-Marquette room, U.C. Dr. Robert Miller from the Forestry Department will be speaking on "Trends in Urban Forestry: Where is it going?" Everyone is welcome to attend and seek out the job possibilities we have for you.

PERSONAL: Jean: I really couldn't tell you if there are any rhinos in Schmeekle. I went looking the other day, but I didn't get too far — I lost my mocassins in the mud! I think there are some winos in Hyer though. Gina. P.S. I hear Castor Canadensis has a new movie out. Castor meets Gidget in Hawaii.

PERSONAL: To Homo in 206, you are the best! This semester has been great despite the dickheads, and the line always being busy. Hang in there woman, the water will be ready soon. Love ya, Homo 218.

PERSONAL: Mel, you pickle woman, we'll have no more of this "frustration," our time will come. Hang in there baby, Love ya, Guess who?
