Toward global awareness

There is a great need for us to attain a higher level of global awareness today if we are to come to grips with the crises plaguing the contemporary global political and social system. We need to be able to discern trends in the international scene, detect signals warning us of emerging social problems, to think seriously and critically about alternative solutions and possible future worlds, as well as recommend strategies for achieving those solutions and worlds.

We cannot afford to seclude ourselves from the rest of the world because our world has evolved to a state of interdependence among the nations. We can no longer ignore the important fact that our future well-being in large part rests on international cooperation and global unity. We need to give more attention to major crises like war, social injustice, widespread poverty, and ecological imbalance, which are global in scope. It is becoming increasingly clear that most of these major problems confronting humankind defy national solutions and perspectives and are generally aggravated, if not directly caused, by the imperatives of national sovereignty.

To illustrate the interdependence among the nations, we can consider as an example the heavy emphasis placed on international trade in each nation. The economic benefits nations derive from international trade, which has grown to immense proportions, are multitudinous. The import and export of goods and services are of great economic importance to every nation. We need to share the fruits of our labor if we want to enjoy and benefit from a larger variety of goods and services. The importance of the economic interdependence among the nations can be seen by the springing up of numerous giant trade entities. Big corporations have long recognized that expansion into other nations is an effective way to increase their portfolio. These multinational corporations have helped in creating and fostering a global village. We must recognize that we are living in a global village.

In light of the heavy interdependence among nations, we must elevate ourselves to a higher level of understanding of our relationship with the rest of the world. We cannot continue to live, figuratively speaking, in a hole, where our view or perspective of the world is narrow and obscured. We need to emerge from that "hole" to achieve a higher level of understanding through gaining deeper insights into other cultures. The rich and diverse cultures of our world can offer us with alternative solutions to problems. The same global problem is frequently interpreted in different ways by observers from different cultures. Thus, we must attempt to foster transnational and cross-cultural perspectives in our search for solutions to problems.

Although the study of other cultures has long been stressed in our educational institutions, it can be noted that many such programs have been eliminated either due to lack of interest or ignorance. Much has to be done to boost the study of other cultures. And ignorance is the mother of hostility.

With most academic institutions emphasizing career-oriented programs, which are most demanded by students, we seem to have taken a step backward in terms of contributing to international cooperation and global unity. An academic institution should have the priority and responsibility of enhancing humankind and preserving our heritage.

While the West has definitely been in the lead in technology, we cannot be quite as certain that it has also been in the lead in the arts and philosophy. All we know for certain is that Western arts and philosophy have been disseminated more efficiently and more widely than any other intellectual heritage in the world. We should redress this imbalance in the dissemination of mankind's intellectual heritage. Academic institutions, the chief disseminator,

Promoting wellness in organizations

Creating healthier organizational environments is the topic of a new book written by the director of the Institute for Lifestyle Improvement at UWSP.

Joseph P. Opatz has penned "A Primer of Health Promotion: Creating Healthy Organizational Cultures," published last month by Oryx Publications, Washington, D.C.

Health promotion is a relatively new phenomenon in the organizational setting. So far, much of the wellness emphasis has been placed on changing individual behaviors such as quitting smoking, says the author. But, he adds, people's everyday environments, the cultures in which they live and work, need to be changed in order to support and maintain healthier lifestyles.

He calls his book a "primer" because it includes basic information helpful to university students pursuing careers in health promotion, as well as strategies for professional practitioners setting up programs.

The publication, which is available for purchase at the UWSP Bookstore, is being used as a textbook in a wellness management course at the university.

Some of the subjects he explores in the book are planning, implementing, assessing and marketing wellness programs in corporate and other organizational settings. He also includes samples of wellness and health risk inventories developed at UWSP and examples of programs currently being used at the university.

Opatz terms the field "ripe" for new writings about health-related subjects.

He says the institute receives about 1,000 requests per month for information about facilitating institutional programs. Currently, more than 200 colleges and universities throughout the country are creating new health promotion projects, he estimates.

Some of the institute's most recent clients are staff members of hospitals and medical facilities trying to catch up in the areas of wellness education and public service. Opatz says it makes sense for medical personnel to develop expertise in the prevention of illness as well as its treatment.

The institute is part of the UWSP Foundation, Inc. Opatz calls the facility, "completely self-sustaining." In fact, it donated $25,000 of its income back to the foundation last year.

When Opatz was hired as the program's director, it employed one person. Now he heads a staff of five full-time and six part-time employees.

The institute is funded through sales of the Lifestyle Assessment Questionnaire, computer software, audio-visual aids and other educational materials. The National Wellness Conference, which attracts hundreds of participants from throughout the U.S. and Canada to the UWSP campus each summer, also helps support the program.

In addition, the facility's staff members are paid to serve as consultants to other organizations. Opatz says they have signed a contract with the Pentagon to train health professionals in the military stationed in West Germany this spring.

Because it is such a new area, the author and most of his contemporaries have entered the health promotion field from other backgrounds. His training was in education and manage-

Opatz holds a master's of education from Kent State University and a Ph.D. in higher education studies from the University of Minnesota. He formerly was employed by Hennepin County Government in Minneapolis, where he developed a health promotion program for 8,000 employees.

Since coming to UWSP in 1982, he has received a $9,500 grant to develop a microcomputer program which measures probable life expectancy based on lifestyle factors. Campbell Soups also recently granted $10,000 to the institute for special projects.

Forum on drinking problems

A public forum on controversies surrounding consumption of alcohol, especially among the young, will be held Monday night, March 11, at UWSP.

Speakers will include public officials and people who are advocates for responsible drinking and-or provide services to people with drinking problems.

The 8 p.m. session will be in the Wisconsin Room, sponsored as a public service by the staff of Roach Residence Hall. Planners said they are encouraging the participation of interested people from beyond the campus.

Elected officials on the panel will be State Rep. Stan Gruszynski (D-Stevens Point), Portage County District Attorney John Ozinga, Portage County Coroner Scott Riffeleman and UWSP Student Government President Alan Kesner.

The panelists will be Stu Whipple, alcohol education coordinator at UWSP; Mary Ellen Nelson of Mid Wisconsin Psychotherapy of Stevens Point; and a local emergency medical technician.

Moderator will be Boyd Huppert of the WSAW-TV news staff in Wausau.

Topics of discussion will be new drunk driving laws, pros and cons of raising the state's drinking age to 21, legislation trends on drinking, economic impact of the drinking age and drinking's effect on the college campus.

UWSP holds open house

The University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point will hold its third annual open house Sunday, March 24, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The event will be held in conjunction with the seventh annual antique show and sale held in Quandt Gymnasium and the 13th annual Festival of Arts in the Fine Arts Center.

Every academic building will be open to the public during the open house. Academic departments are planning special programs such as: free water testing for nitrates, free pH testing of soil, various performances by student and faculty groups in the College of Fine Arts, free showing of Walt Disney's "Jungle Book" and radio station WXYQ's Polka Jamboree.

Peggy Szczytko, of the University Relations staff, is coordinating the open house. Programs listing times and places of events will be posted in various public places throughout Central Wisconsin. Copies can be requested by calling the office of University Relations at 346-2481.

The open house and Festival of the Arts are open to the public without charge. Tickets will be required for people attending the antique show and sale, with proceeds going to the UWSP athletic program.

International Dinner

The International Club will host its annual dinner on Saturday, March 9, at 6 p.m. in the Allen Center at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

About 500 guests will partake of foods from the Middle East, the Orient and Central America and view after-dinner entertainment including dance, music and comedy.

Tickets are available for $9 each at the University Center Information Desk and the Foreign Student Office, main flood Deitzell Hall. Proceeds from the event go to programs conducted by international students.

This year the menu includes: egg rolls (Chinese appetizers); cucumber-yogurt salad (from Jordan); "Lollipop Chicken" (deboned wings, from Malaysia); Dutch beef roast (from Indonesia); "Mee Hoo" (fried rice sticks, from Singapore); "Yakitori" (barbecued chicken with sauce, from Japan); "Dodo" and "Motoko" (pork and vegetables, from Cameroon); spicy chicken with rice (from Pakistan); a dessert, "Pulut Serikaya" (a cake made from coconut, milk and rice, from Malaysia). "Oolong Tea" will be served with the meal.

A national costume fashion show will be held during dinner.

The entertainment will include a Chinese lion dance and Chinese stick dance, a traditional Indian dance and a Malay candle dance. A French song will be sung and an ensemble of musicians playing guitars, bongos and piano will perform. A comedy skit will be included in the show.

The International Club has 180 members of which about 40 are Americans. On the executive board are Al P. Wong, president; Patrick Kearns, vice president; Lee-Chu Lin, secretary; Jacelyn Ong, treasurer; and Fang Hong, publicity officer. The Special Events Committee Chairperson is Hannie Liew; Sports and Games Committee Chairperson, Mohamed Fathil bin Ismail; Communication Committee Chairperson is Hannah Haddison. Advisors are Marcus Fang and William Clark.

Quintet presents French music

The Wisconsin Arts quintet, a faculty performing group from UWSP, will present a program of French music at 8 p.m., Sunday, March 10, in Michelson Hall of the Fine Arts Center.

The performance is open to the public without charge.

The quintet will play Jean Philippe Rameau's "Suite Champetre"; Jean Francaix's "Quintette"; Jean Michel Damase's "Dix-Sept Variations"; and Eugene Bozza's "Variations Sur Un Theme Libre."

Members of the ensemble are Paul Doebler, flute; Daniel Stewart, oboe; Andrea Splittberger-Rosen, clarinet; David Beadle, bassoon; and Christopher Callahan, horn.

The group, which was founded in 1971, performs twice a year on the UWSP campus, as well as staging tours throughout Wisconsin and Minnesota. The musicians have played several times on "Sunday Afternoon Live: From the Elvehjem," broadcast over the Wisconsin Public Radio Network and have appeared in Vogel Hall of Milwaukee's Performing Arts Center.

The ensemble has premiered works by composer Raymond Luedeke and recorded "Contest Music for Woodwind Quintet" on the Redwood Label.

A tribute to jazz ensembles

A "Tribute to the Big Bands" featuring jazz ensembles from UWSP will be held at 3 p.m., Sunday, March 17, at the Sentry Theater.

Proceeds from the concert will benefit the UWSP jazz studies scholarship fund. Ticket prices at the door are $3 for adults and $1.50 for students and senior citizens.

The Mid-Americans Vocal Jazz Ensemble, directed by Charles Reichl, the University Jazz Ensemble, directed by Mike Irish, and the University Jazz Lab Band, directed by Steve Zenz, will perform music from the past 50 years. Donald Greene, chairman of the UWSP music department, will narrate the concert.

The program will include the music of Glenn Miller, Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Stan Kenton, Tommy Dorsey, Woody Herman, Claude Thornhill, Maynard Ferguson and Artie Shaw.

Sexual harassment

To the Editor:

Sexual harassment was the topic for SGA's Women's Affairs Committee last Wednesday. Dr. Bailey, the Affirmative Action Officer, spoke on sexual harassment here at UWSP. His data showed that in the past three years there have been five incidences of sexual harassment on campus. I feel the students, both male and female, should be aware of this happening on campus.

Sexual harassment is defined as unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors or other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature. This includes but is not limited to the deliberate, repeated making of unsolicited gestures or comments, or the deliberate, repeated display of offensive sexual graphic materials which is not necessary for business purposes.

Sexual harassment is recognized as a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, U.S. Equal Opportunity Commission

Rules and by the courts. It is subject to disciplinary action including but not limited to reprimand, temporary suspension, expulsion or discharge of the harassing individual.

If sexual harassment happens to you here at the university, you have a recourse. Contact the Equal Opportunity Affirmative Action Officer and sign a complaint. It then goes to the Chancellor and then the individual is confronted with the allegations. If he admits it, it is resolved by what the student wants. If he denies the charges, an investigation is started.

Dr. Bailey says the person usually has a pattern; he may be hitting on more than one student hoping one will give in.

"You have an obligation to your fellow students," says Dr. Bailey, "to inform them about the individual so that others won't be put in the same situation."

Not only can you go to the Chancellor about sexual harassment, but you can also go to the District Attorney and file criminal charges. An investigation will follow and if proof is found, formal charging, arrest and trial. So if you have been sexually harassed, I urge you to see Dr. Bailey over in Old Main, for yourself and for your fellow students.

worth of scholarships to deserving UWSP students. The application deadline for the ROTC three-year scholarship occurs in early March. Students interested in applying should contact the Military Science Department now.

Many off-campus organizations offer scholarships based upon academic potential and/or group affiliation. Some of these groups are the Knights of Columbus, the Boy Scouts, the Young American Bowling Alliance, the United Paperworkers International Union, and the National Campers and Hikers Association. Many students have focused on loans and are not aware of the many other available programs. The Military Science Department has a guide to financial aid called the College Aid Checkbook, which can be picked up in Room 204, SSC.

Additionally, students can make sure of work-study and part- or full-time employment. If work-study is curtailed, some students may have to seek off-campus employment. Some may have to delay their education while they earn and save sufficient funds to pay for their education.

The U.S. Army Reserve and the Wisconsin National Guard offer educational bonuses to qualified students. Additionally, loan repayment plans or tuition assistance programs are available through the military services. Military recruiters have information about educational programs. Recruiters are frequently on campus and their phone numbers are available in the phone book.

I believe any student who meets the entrance requirements for UWSP can find the funding to earn a degree from UWSP.

Peterson's weekly epistle

To the Editor:

In recent weeks a rather interesting debate on gay rights has been carried on in The Pointer.

Those few people who choose to lead a total homosexual lifestyle are being sent a message from conservative leaders and others. That message is we don't care what you do for your jollies but keep your sexual preferences in the bedroom. In other words, if you want to be gay, stay in the closet.

Morality can't be legislated and we can't judge against those who choose to be gay—some compassion must be shown. What I object to is the efforts of the homosexual "political movement" to compel the rest of us to respect their lifestyle. The aim of such a movement is to legitimize homosexuality as an option that is morally no different than the conventional option. Yet homosexuality contravenes Biblical guidelines and is contrary to human nature.

Gay rights advocates state that their lifestyle is superior to the heterosexual one and these advocates won't stop until society accepts it as such. Many men, according to studies, will have at least one homosexual experience in their lifetime, yet that doesn't mean those men will commit themselves to a homosexual lifestyle.

Those who lead a total gay life are a threat to the family and the reproductive drive that must exist in any viable society. The gay rights movement is a destabilizing and corrupting force which has turned such civilized and civil cities as San Francisco into political and homo-sexual jungles.

Gays are at war with the values of the "straight world" as they live in their psychologically askew and hostile enclaves. They attempt to colonize the workplace and ceaselessly cruise in search of the uncertain or dabbling hetero. Timidity and permissiveness give them the keys to the city.

Such a movement can be stopped when public indignation mandates it and the media and people like Melissa Gross stop giving the movement such adulated attention. The Nazistic nature of homosexuality will eventually end up like Hitler's Germany if they keep pushing. No one is ever going to do more than feel sorry for those that are gay and society will put limits on them if gays insist on carrying on the battle. This nation will never accept gay rights to the extent gays want.

If you want to be gay, you have to be willing to pay the price and stop eating Sunkist oranges!

Budget cuts

To the Editor:

On Sunday, March 3, SGA met to approve final organizational budget cuts for 1985-86. As a graduating president, I am concerned about how the cuts will affect my organization next year and in future years. We, like every other Student Government funded group on campus, took a fairly large cut (about one-quarter of the amount we requested).

However, I understand SGA had the responsibility of cutting in excess of $100,000 from the original budget requests. I don't envy their position and I'm sure they're glad it's all over for this year.

I think instead of complaining about how the organizations will manage in 1985-86, we all should stop and thank SGA for putting a great deal of time and effort into making the budget cuts as painless as possible. We will make do with what we have. I hope other groups can say the same.

Thanks again, SGA.

Funding available

To the Editor:

Students at UWSP should not lose heart because of the views stated in "A Privilege for the Wealthy?" An education is still financially possible for most UWSP students.

It is true that President Reagan has advocated limits on financial aid. However, your editorial implies that low income students will waste their academic talent due to a lack of funding. That view is not substantiated by the facts.

Financial aid, in the form of loans and scholarships, is available and will continue to be available at UWSP. The quantity of funds and the eligibility criteria may be changed. Financial aid in the form of loans normally has eligibility requirements based on demonstrated financial need. Since demonstrated financial need is a key criteria for loans, it would appear that low income students will continue to be eligible for student loans. Students without a demonstrated financial need will not be as eligible for loans if cutbacks are made and they will have to seek other methods of financing their education.

Scholarships are typically awarded based on a combination of academic performance and demonstrated financial need. The UWSP Foundation and many departments at UWSP offer scholarships to deserving students.

Last September, the Military Science Department awarded scholarships worth $65,000 to eight UWSP students based solely on academic performance and leadership potential, not financial need. The potential exists for the Military Science Department to award $650,000

Nicaragua: Students look at the reality

by Noel Radomski
News Editor

President Reagan's second term has been marked by several urgent issues, opposed to the relative calmness during the first quarter of his team. The crisis on the farm belt, the MX missile system, the budget, tax simplification and lastly Nicaragua.

Sunday, Secretary of State George P. Shultz met with Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega in Uruguay to discuss present Nicaraguan issues. They only met for an hour, with Shultz asking the Sandinistan government to reduce the Soviet-Cuban presence and Ortega reaffirmed his decision to ask Cuba to withdraw 100 military advisers and to place a moratorium on the acquisition of new weapon systems.

Although the media has covered only the surface of the Central American, particularly Nicaraguan issue, two UWSP students gave opposing reasons for supporting or opposing the present Nicaraguan government.

Chris Odahowski, President of the Committee on Latin America (COLA), stated that Nicaragua is a sovereign independent nation. Referring to the Nicaraguan revolution in 1979 which ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza, "During the revolution, the people of Nicaragua had to fight because they couldn't stand the totalitarianism of Somoza. The Somoza government exploited both the land and the people."

Somoza created a country of extreme poverty while amassing a personal fortune worth half a billion dollars. His holdings included 20 percent of the arable land of Nicaragua and 25 percent of its industry.

Dave Zweifel, Chairman of the UWSP College Republicans, spoke on the issue of whether Nicaragua is a sovereign independent nation. Zweifel noted that the recent election of President Ortega contained controversies. "In my mind, the elections were a scam. The Sandinista government (the Nicaraguan government) has neighborhood councils which hand out ration cards that allow the citizens to get food, shoes and clothing. The Sandinistas had poll watchers inside; however, if you went behind the curtains to vote, they didn't take kindly to that. They pulled the ration cards so you couldn't eat. So what they have done was to blackmail them in voting for Daniel Ortega. So, I don't think it declares them (Nicaragua) to be sovereign."

Odahowski also added, "What is a definition of what a government should do? The Somoza government didn't educate the people—Sandinistas have started education programs." With the evidence that in 1982 the literacy rate went up to 87 percent; whereas before the overthrow of the Somoza regime the literacy rate was at 30-40 percent. Odahowski further noted, "The Somoza government didn't believe in opposition. The Sandinistas have so far censored press—but the people who are opposing the Sandinistan government aren't being executed for opposition. They're trying to build democracy; they're not trying to destroy it like Somoza."

With the recent arrests of three priests in Arizona, the question of to what extent can a sanctuary movement go to protect the lives of the refugees has yet to be answered.

Zweifel noted the question of whether or not the reason for leaving Central America was political asylum or economic hardship. "We have, in some instances, given political asylum to some refugees from Central America. Basically I think the problem is too many people who are trying to run across the borders, claiming political asylum. There is economic hardship, in those cases which are deemed by the Immigration Department to be realistic and genuine—we've done all we had to do. We're still continuing to aid them. But we cannot allow the whole country of El Salvador or Nicaragua or Honduras to immigrate over here. Everybody wants to come to the land of opportunity. We have to keep a tight control."

Odahowski spoke of United States aid to El Salvador and the Contras (freedom fighters) to a reason why there is such a movement of the refugees out of Central America and to the United States. "In a recent bipartisan commission, they concluded that only 13-15 percent of the U.S. aid is economic-social aid, with up to 75 percent of the aid being military. How can we say those people are coming here for economic reasons. When we're providing military aid in El Salvador... They can repair the El Salvadoran soldiers and the Contras, but the civilians who are being hit by napalm bombs do not necessarily have the resources to repair themselves and their property."

Odahowski went on to discuss the direct link between U.S. and El Salvador because U.S. planes with heat sensors are going over El Salvador at night, finding out where the guerrillas are. "The thing is heat sensors don't say guerrillas—they say humanity. Who is to say those are civilians aiding guerrillas; which is not illegal under U.N. Charters."

Odahowski stressed, "The sanctuary movement has to increase. Our government hired people to infiltrate the Central American refugees. The government officials had bugs on them when they went to the church which was helping the refugees. What the government did was unfair for the sanctuary movement."

In President Reagan's last radio speech, he spoke on the issue of the freedom fighters (Contras). Reagan is asking Congress to once again give money to the freedom fighters.

Zweifel agrees with President Reagan that Congress should fund the freedom fighters. "I'm hoping that Congress will give military aid to freedom fighters because I feel their cause is well worthwhile fighting for democracy. Where would we be if France didn't give us aid?"

Zweifel also said, "Nicaragua is turning into a totalitarian state—into a Marxist state. They have Russian and Cuban advisers... they have Russian ships three to four times a week bringing in defense items, which are fine. I don't think it's wrong for a country to defend itself. But they're also bringing in very offensive weapons."

Zweifel explained that the present Nicaragua is not as democratic as it thinks it is. "I think that's one of the problems. They went from freedom and democracy in the revolution... But then Ortega got into power, and he shut off one of the factions. They became very left wing, a Marxist type of regime. That's what freedom fighters are fighting for. They used to be comrades in arms with Ortega. Now they're fighting him because he

Odahowski believes there will be continued deaths in Central America, particularly Nicaragua, if Congress funds freedom fighters. "If Contra aid goes through, more destruction of humanity will occur. Nicaragua isn't a great threat. They're about the same size as Wisconsin, 57,113 square miles with 2.9 million people. We shouldn't fear the children who are learning to read—peasants who are learning farming methods."

Odahowski went on to add that what the U.S. is doing is illegal. "The way we're destabilizing Nicaragua, I think it's illegal; a lot of people think so also. We always think it's illegal when the Soviet Union tries to bring itself in a country—so why isn't it illegal when the U.S. does it?"

Odahowski added, "What we have to realize is that this movement is increasing with increased military expenditures. Nobody wants to see another Vietnam. How long this is going on... The longer it goes on, the more lives that are going to be lost, basically innocent ones."

Zweifel spoke of having a democracy in Nicaragua. "I support Reagan; we'd like to see people of Nicaragua have a free choice and free chances. We'd like to see all people to vote and have a democratic election. We've made some mistakes; mining harbors, the book that should have been monitored a little better, but I think, in essence, supporting freedom fighters is the best thing we ever could do."

In a Mexican newspaper, a writer said, "For 45 years, no one in the U.S. government asked the Somozas to protect democratic liberties, hold elections, or free the economy from the monopolistic suffocation by

A special report on the Irish Republican Army

by Susan Higgins
Staff reporter

The Irish Republican Army (IRA) scored a direct hit on the Royal Ulster Constabulary base in Newry, Northern Ireland, last Thursday.

Eight officers and one civilian were killed and several others were wounded in the tea-time attack. Another officer is missing and presumed dead.

The outlawed IRA guerrillas fired six mortars from the back of a truck parked 250 yards from the base, while the officers were having their evening meal.

This is believed to be the highest casualty count suffered by the predominantly Protestant RUC since sectarian and political fighting broke out in Northern Ireland in August of 1969.

The effectiveness of the mortars used leads to speculation as to just where the weapons came from. Although the IRA has used mortars before, made secretly within the country, they have never been as efficient as those used in the border town last week.

In their struggle to expel the British from Northern Ireland the IRA has received a certain amount of support from Libya and the United States.

It has been reported that many people fighting for the IRA have gone to Libya to learn how to fight. In the meantime, certain organizations in the U.S. are suspected of supporting the IRA by sending funds and arms. One such group is NORAID, Irish Northern Aid Committee.

Although NORAID claims the money it raises goes to families of imprisoned IRA members, it is believed most of their funds are used to purchase arms for the IRA.

NORAID is suspected of sending a 7½ ton shipment of arms to Ireland last fall. The cache, sent from the U.S., was seized off the western coast of the Republic of Ireland and the five crew members were arrested of crimes against the state.

Among the load confiscated were several rounds of ammunition, automatic weapons and hand grenades.

In her speech before Congress last month, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher made a plea to the American people not to be "misled into making contributions to seemingly innocuous groups." Thatcher herself almost became a casualty at the hands of the IRA last October 12 when a bomb went off in the hotel Mrs. Thatcher was staying at while attending a conference in Brighton.

After the attack last week, Mrs. Thatcher sent a message to the victims' families calling the assault a "barbarous deed." The Prime Minister of Ireland also condemned the attack in Newry, calling it "the mass murder of fellow Irishmen."

SGA minutes

Ron Zimmerman, Director of Schmeckle Reserve, gave an informational slide presentation on past, present and future considerations for Schmeckle Reserve. Changes in the reserve have taken place rapidly over the past 5-10 years with the development of Schmeckle Reserve Lake, the fitness trail and the newly opened Visitor Center. "We need to look toward the future since areas around the reserve are expanding with construction," said Zimmerman.

Plans have been made to build a Super 8 Motel next to the Road Star Inn with the possibility of a small shopping center opening up next to IGA. There's also a possibility that condominiums will be constructed in an empty field next to the lake. "We'd like to keep SGA informed on the status of the reserve with the hope of some kind of funding for the future."

Senate elections for 1985-86 will take place Tuesday, March 19. Students will vote in their respective colleges, that is, students in professional studies will vote in COPS and natural resource students will vote in the CNR Building. Students with undeclared majors will vote in the lobby of Collins Classroom Center.

A unified set of guidelines on hiring and firing procedures for student organizations was discussed by Crystal Gustafson, Chairperson for SORROC. "In the past, we've only had minor disagreements on employment, but the potential for serious legal problems does exist. We'd like to give students the opportunity to voice their complaints if they feel they've been treated unfairly," said Ms. Gustafson. Legislation should be ready some time this semester.

A resolution on child care funding for the Day Care Center at Delzell was discussed by the Senate and will be voted on March 7. The resolution places the Day Care Center in a special funding bracket which helps ensure adequate monies for the next three years. The center presently receives $16,775, one-third of their operating expenses.

Organ transplant conference scheduled

The new Institute for Health Policy and Law will sponsor a conference March 11 at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point on "Organ Transplantation — Problems of Procurement, Funding and Rationing: Fashioning Wisconsin's Response."

Institute Director David A. Peters of the UWSP Department of Philosophy said the conference will bring together members of the medical and legal professions, representatives of the insurance industry, state legislators and members of state health care regulatory agencies.

It will be the first public event sponsored by the institute which has been established with grants from the UWSP Foundation, the Sentry Foundation of Stevens Point, and the Walter Alexander Foundation of Wausau and other sources.

Arthur L. Caplan, associate for the humanities at the Hastings Center in New York and a leading writer on ethical and policy issues allied with transplant technology, will be the lead speaker in the conference segment addressing the topic of improving state and national mechanisms of organ retrieval. A legal analysis of Caplan's proposal will be presented by Robyn Shapiro, assistant clinical professor of health law at the Medical College of Wisconsin in Milwaukee. The practical administrative and institutional aspects of the proposal will be discussed by Douglas Miller, renal transplant coordinator at the University Hospitals in Madison, and June Lego, emergency care nurse at St. Mary's Hospital in Rhinelander.

Bryan Luce, senior analyst with the Battelle Memorial Institute in Washington, D.C., will discuss the value and limitations of cost-benefit analysis and cost effectiveness analysis in formulating policies concerning the controlled development and diffusion of transplant technology. Luce is a co-author of a recent leading text on the methodology of these modes of analysis.

The question of whether there is a higher moral priority attached to rescuing people who are already suffering from end-stage cardiac, liver, kidney, and pancreas disease than preventing the onset of such diseases in those not yet afflicted with them will be examined by Professor Paul Menzel, a philosopher at

Pacific Lutheran University, Tacoma, Wash. Dr. William Hettler, of the UWSP Health Service and Lifestyle Improvement Program, will address the prevention/treatment issue.

Representatives of private and public insurers, insurance regulators, and the medical profession will discuss a set of interlinked questions concerning third party reimbursement for transplants. They are: Andrew Korsak of the Health Insurance Association of America, Chicago; Beverly Krutz of Wisconsin Blue Cross/Blue Shield, Milwaukee; Dr. Folkert Belzer, chairman of the department of surgery at the University of Wisconsin School of Medicine, Madison; Dr. Alfred D. Dally, chief medical consultant to Wisconsin's Medicaid program, Madison; and Richard Carlson, assistant director of the Illinois Department of Insurance, Springfield, Ill.

In weeks following the conference, an institute policy formulating committee will convene to propose and provide the rationale for revisions in state statutes or private and public policies governing the procurement, funding, and rationing of transplants. Its report will be published in late spring for members of the Wisconsin legislature and health care regulatory agencies and health care professionals.

In addition, Peters is working with members of St. Michael's Hospital critical care staff in Stevens Point and others to develop an information manual for inservice programs for intensive care personnel and emergency staff on various aspects of organ procurement.

As director of the institute, Peters is a specialist in the area of environmental and medical ethics and religious studies. He has taught at UWSP the past eight years, and has three degrees for Michigan State University plus a bachelor of divinity degree from McCormick Seminary. He previously taught at Carleton College and St. Olaf College, both in Northfield, Minn. His hometown is Livonia, Mich.

For the public, the institute is sponsoring regular luncheon-discussion groups in communities throughout Central Wisconsin.

The institute has administrative offices in the medical library complex at St. Michael's Hospital.

Lecture on population

The president of the international Population Institute will make a return visit to UWSP on Thursday, March 14, to give a public address and speak to classes.

Werner Fornos, an advocate for family planning as a human right and reduction of runaway world population growth, will be hosted on campus by the Public Administration Student Organization and Phi Alpha Theta honorary history fraternity.

His public lecture will be at 8 p.m. in Room 125 of the University Center. He will address two classes earlier in the day.

Fornos, who appears often on network television and radio programs and is quoted in and writes articles for nationally-circulated publications, spoke to several groups on campus and in the community about two years ago.

The Washington, D.C.-based Population Institute is a privately funded, nonprofit organization which strives for stimulating positive actions toward ensuring more equitable balance between global population and resources. It seeks commitments from leaders in both the industrialized and developing countries to solve problems of rampant population growth.

Fornos, who has been associated with the institute and its auxiliary organizations since 1978, is a former faculty member at George Washington University and worked on projects involving population and family planning in Tunisia, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Turkey, Mexico, the Philippines, Indonesia, China, Sri Lanka and Kenya.

The former Maryland state legislator has held a number of administrative posts in state and national government as a specialist in manpower-labor management. I.e. has participated in all major forums involving global population since the 1974 World Population Conference in Bucharest, Romania. In 1980, he received the Distinguished Population Service Award.

the patrimonial dynasty. Today, all that was given the Somoza is denied the Sandinistas; all that was pardoned the Somoza is demanded of the Sandinistas."

Certain ideological groups hint that the U.S. should directly intervene, militarily, into Nicaragua; but former head of the Central Intelligence Agency Stansfield Turner disagrees.

"We are not likely to get away with toppling the Nicaraguan government by covert means. Even if we do, though, it will likely be a pyrrhic victory. The other costs to us will be high."

Thus, when the Nicaraguan people led by the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN) ousted the U.S.-supported dictator Anastasio Somoza, the Nicaraguan government must continue their process of becoming a sovereign independent democratic nation. Since the revolution, the country had engaged in an intense process of reconstruction, remaking the entire social, political and economic fabric of life. Part of the Nicaraguan problems may be compounded by the Reagan administration's not-so-secret war to destabilize the Nicaraguan government. A war justified by the Reagan administration on the grounds that U.S. national security is threatened by the small nation of 2.7 million people.

We must also notice that a large majority of the freedom fighters are past members of the Somoza National Guard. The Nicaraguan people do not have fond memories of the Somoza regime. The United States must understand the implications it may surface if the freedom fighters are actually past members of the Somoza government. We must also make sure that the United States does not exceed the international laws, which we both use and agree with. Thus, the opinions of both students discussed earlier should both be respected and taken into consideration.

As Dr. John A. Booth, Associate Professor at the University of Texas, San Antonio, said, "In the area of human rights, Nicaragua has manifested certain problems regarding press freedom, freedom of conscience, and due process of law. However, in comparison to the Somoza regime and to contemporary El Salvador and Guatemala, Sandinista Nicaragua has a vastly superior human rights record in almost every respect. Of particular note is the freedom of religion which, despite tensions with Roman Catholicism over support for the revolution, has generally prospered. The very limited incidence of terror (arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty) and the tolerance of opposition political parties in Nicaragua are remarkable considering that the society is in revolution. The regime has handled some groups and incidents maladroitly, but claims of wholesale and systematic abuses of such rights (e.g., reports of massacres of Miskitus Indians) have been discredited as fabrications by politically neutral observers."

Environmental education

A consortium on environmental education, comprised of representatives from 11 states, has been formed with Rick Wilke of UWSP as a founding director and secretary.

Wilke participated in the organizational meeting recently in Des Moines, Iowa, where he also served as one of the speakers with Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad. Wilke, who is director of UWSP's Central Wisconsin Environmental Station and a faculty member in the College of Natural Resources, spoke on "Environmental Education—A Midwest Perspective."

Consortium membership is comprised of Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Oklahoma and Wisconsin and several of the state representatives on the board are graduates of UWSP.

Wilke said the consortium's effort to further environmental education will be done through the enhancement of communication efforts, development of programs, dissemination of environmental education materials, and assessments of environmental education offerings.

Attempts will be made to secure large grants and allocations from state legislatures. The organizational meeting, for example, was financed with a $10,500 grant from the Izaak Walton League.

Wilke said plans are to have the consortium staffed by a full-time executive director and a secretary with headquarters at one of the representative universities.

He said he would make a pitch for UWSP to be selected.

Foreign Student Office provides a valuable service

by Amy L. Schroeder
Features Editor

"Too often people leave here with a degree, but they don't really have an education," said Dr. Marcus Fang, director of the Foreign Student Office.

Fang believes that an "education" comes from experiencing new things, new cultures and new people. These are the goals of the Foreign Student Office which is located in Delzell Hall.

Fang said the office tries to find ways to help the foreign students adjust to their new culture, while at the same time experiencing American culture as it really is.

Some of the "devices" used by the office are clubs such as the International Club, which also sponsors the International Dinner. Through things of this nature, Fang said, "Students have the opportunity to experience one another. They engage in activities which inspire togetherness."

Another program that is sponsored by the Foreign Student Office is the host family program. Fang said, "This is probably one of the most valuable experiences gained by foreign students because it gives them a chance to experience American culture firsthand." The students don't actually live with their host families, in this case, rather the family may just be there to take them shopping, help with orientation, and help overcome homesickness.

Another group which the foreign student office uses to help orientate the new students is simply the "veteran" foreign students.

Fang said whenever a new student arrives, "we have an 'old' student literally take them by the hand, and show them around to places like banks, grocery stores, and K-Mart." Another responsibility of the "veteran" students is to show the new students around campus and take them through registration. "That is a very confusing process for them," added Fang. "Most of them don't know the jargon like 'credits,' they have no idea what words mean when they're used in these different contexts."

The Foreign Student Office also works in conjunction with Dr. Helen Corneli, in the Semester Abroad Program Office, to help put together a group known as SHARE (Student Home Abroad Relations Experience). "In this program we are trying to bring together those students who have gone abroad, and the foreign students here to talk about mutual problems experienced and to share with one another their common experiences." Fang expressed that this group has great potential but that it is also very hard to get the two groups together due to conflicting interests.

In addition to sponsoring groups and activities such as these, the Foreign Student Office also tries to help the new students overcome some of their biggest adjustment difficulties.

Fang said one of the most common complaints is the food. "The students are very often not used to the type of diet we have here, and it's especially hard for those who are vegetarians."

He also added that it is hard for foreign students to become acquainted with American students, because they are often times not as "outgoing as" the Americans. "The foreign students usually sit back and wait to be approached by the Americans because they (especially the African students) don't feel welcome here."

"In other countries, foreign guests are treated so differently," said Fang. "They are guests so the natives go out of their way to be nice to them and give them special treatment. Therefore, when the foreign students come here, they expect the same treatment in return," added Fang.

Another thing that is often difficult for foreign students is adjusting to the language, and the methods of learning used here. "They are usually only used to taking essay tests, at the end of a one or two-year period, therefore it's very difficult for them to get used to constant testing in the objective style," said Fang.

The Foreign Student office also runs the English Language Institute, which aids those for-foreign students who are qualified to enter the university in all respects except that they have an English proficiency. The institute helps bring their English ability "up to par."

Fang added that another thing that is usually difficult for the students to adjust to is the weather. "They are not used to the cold," he said. "I remember once when I went to the airport to pick up a new student in January and it was -25 degrees Fahrenheit and windy, and this student had flown straight from his home in Africa where it was 107 degrees Fahrenheit when he left. He had no coat and was standing out there shivering."

While there may be many obstacles for foreign students to overcome, Fang said there are also many things that they really enjoy about American culture. For example, the music and their accessibility to it. Along with music, Fang said they really seem to enjoy wearing American fashions even though they often express that

by Cyle C. Brueggeman
Staff reporter

At 6 p.m., Saturday, March 9, Allen Center will become a cultural mecca as the International Club stages its 15th Annual International Dinner. The extravaganza promises to be bigger and better than those of previous years. According to International Dinner Planning Committee Chair Hannie Liew, "This year we will be selling 500 tickets (up from 400 in previous years), so there will be more opportunities for people who want to attend the dinner."

chicken with rice complete the main courses. Pulut Serikaya, a dessert from Malaysia, is the finale of the meal. The beverage served with dinner is "Oolong" tea which hails from China.

During dinner, a "National Costume Fashion Show" will entertain diners. This will feature 12 people wearing many regional costumes of 10 countries. The National Costume Fashion Show lasts roughly 45 minutes.

After dinner, the entertainment begins with a "Traditional expected to continue for an hour.

Participants in the entertainment include Mary Boettcher, Dennis Siau, Hannie Liew, Eliza Omar, Andy Tsang, Joey Kwong, Albert Chen, Dorothy Liew, Chee-Yi Lim, Shirley Lee, Lee-Chu Lin, Hannah Haddison, Laura Tiede, Jeanne La Court, Quee-Yin Poh Foo, Evelyn Yeow, Jacelyn Ong, Mee-Lang Kwong, Lydia Lee, Kevin Leahy, Albert Chen, Vuong Duong, Patrick Kearns, Timothy

O'Connell, Gina Onn, Juliati Aladin, Juwairiyah Ahmadun, San-San Hong, Sharifah Rozata bte Syed Fathil, Gina Sia, Mee-na Bhaskar and Sathi Pillai.

Approximately 200 students are involved in organizing the International Dinner. "It takes a few months to plan the dinner; it is the biggest function of the International Club," said Ms. Liew. As such, it is a formal dinner and guests are asked to dress accordingly.

Why does the International Club hold an International Dinner annually? "It is one of the main objectives of the club to promote culture exchange for better understanding of people from different countries," Ms. Liew remarked. In the past, the dinner has proven to be an effective way to "promote culture exchange."

Tickets are available for $9 from the UC Information Desk or the Foreign Student Office in Delzell Hall.

About the dinner itself, Ms. Liew said, "It is a nine-course meal and we have dishes from eight countries." It begins with egg rolls, an appetizer from China. The dinner continues with cucumber-yogurt from Jordan and then proceeds with the main courses. Malaysian "Lollipop" chicken leads that list, followed by Dutch beef roast from Indonesia. Fried "Mee Hoon," a dish from Singapore; Japanese Yakitori; Dodo and Motoko (pork and vegetables) from Cameroon; and Pakistani spicy

Womenfest hosted by WRC

by Amy L. Schroeder
Features Editor

In celebration with National Women's History Week (March 3-9) and International Women's Day (March 8), the Women's Resource Center in conjunction with the Women's Studies Student Association sponsored this year's Womenfest on Sunday, March 3.

Guests were entertained by music from the Sweet Adelines, the Womansong Choir (a 30-member choir from Madison) and sing-along leaders Kathryn Jeffers and Betsy Godwin, and Helen Heaton and Jean Rumsey.

Films were also shown throughout the festival in the UC Communications Room. They included "Rosie the Riveter," "Wisconsin Farm Women," "In the Best Interest of Children," "Georgia O'Keefe," "The Touch Film," "Union Maids" and "Malvina Reynolds."

Several local women also gave demonstrations on pottery making, sign language, quilting, spinning and strudel baking.

Organ transplant conference to be held at UWSP

by Lori A. Herne
Staff reporter

"I feel that I have a moral obligation to make certain students, faculty and staff at UWSP know they are invited to the conference," said David Peters, associate professor of philosophy at UWSP.

The conference that Dave Peters is referring to will be held on Monday, March 11, in Room 127 of the University Center. The subject is organ transplantation. Problems that will be addressed include procurement, funding and rationing of organs for transplantation. The conference is being presented by the Institute for Health Policy and Law at Stevens Point, and will be chiefly sponsored by the UWSP Foundation. Other sponsors include the Sentry Foundation and the Walter Alexander Foundation.

There are three separate sessions included in the conference. The first part of the morning session begins at 9 a.m. and lasts until 10:50 a.m. It will address transplants and third-party payors including the coverage criteria and reimbursement restrictions. Some of the questions this session will answer are "What criteria are relevant for coverage decisions concerning non-renal transplants?" and "Should third-party payors adopt the policy of reimbursing for transplants only at centers of proven excellence?"

Scheduled speakers include Andrew Korsak, Assistant Director, Consumer and Professional Relations Division, Health Insurance Association of America; Dr. Folkert O. Belzer, M.D.,

A.R. Curreri Professor of Surgery and Chairman, University of Wisconsin School of Medicine; Beverly J. Krutz, Assistant Vice President-Health Policy and Review, Blue Cross-Blue Shield

Paul Menzel

United of WI; Dr. Alfred D. Daly, M.D., Chief Medical Consultant, Bureau of Health Financing, Wisconsin Department of Health and Social Services; and Richard Carlson, Assistant Director, Department of Insurance, State of Illinois.

The second part of the morning session begins at 11 a.m. and finishes up at 11:50 a.m. The subject for this part of the conference will be the value and limits of cost benefit and cost effectiveness analysis in the development of public policy concerning transplant technology. The presenter will be Bryan R. Luce, Battelle Memorial Institute, Washington, D.C. He is the author of the book "Cost Benefit and Cost Effectiveness Analysis in Health Care."

The luncheon session begins at 12 noon. "Anyone is also invited to join us for this session as we will have chairs out for those interested," said Dave Peters. The subject matter is prevention or treatment for organ diseases. Some questions that will be answered include "Is there a weightier moral responsibility to treat those already in trouble than to help those not yet in trouble?" "What arguments, if any, warrant the widespread belief that we have greater moral obligation to treat the already suffering in those not yet, but statistically likely, to suffer from these diseases in the future?" Presenters include Professor Paul Menzel, Department of Philosophy, Pacific Lutheran University, Tacoma,

Arthur Caplan

Washington. He is the author of "Medical Costs, Moral Choices." Another presenter will be Dr. William Hettler, M.D., University Health Service and Lifestyle Improvement Program, here at UWSP.

The afternoon session will also take place in Room 127 of the University Center and will begin at 1:40 p.m. The subject matter for this session will explore more efficient organ procurement. It will answer the question, "Should hospitals be required to inquire of available next of kin concerning organ donation from the deceased prior to removing the brain-dead individual from a respirator and issuing a death certificate?" Scheduled speakers include Arthur L. Caplan, Associate for the Humanities, The Hastings Center, Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y.; Douglas Miller, Renal Transplant Coordinator, University Hospitals in Madison; Robyn Shapiro, M.D., Associate Director, Regional Center for the Study of Bioethics and Assistant Clinical Professor of Health Law, Medical College of Wisconsin; and June Lego, R.N., Emergency Care Nurse, St. Mary's Hospital in Rhinelander.

"The reason for this conference is not to change policies already in practice in Wisconsin," said Peters, "but we hope to establish a policy formulating committee in the state that will make recommendations for new ways of procuring, funding and rationing of organ transplants."

Another important question the conference will bring out is are we willing to pay for these transplants, and who will pay?

Said Peters, "The issue of organ transplants is a nice illustration of one of the major problems we face in health care delivery today. Even if we do come up with a more efficient way of procuring these organs, who will pay for it?"

In a study conducted by the Office of Commissioner of Insurance for the State of Wisconsin last January, it was revealed that Wisconsin insurance companies would pay up to two-thirds of the cost for a heart and liver transplant, one-third of the cost for heart plus lung transplants, and one-fourth of the cost for a pancreas transplant. Where will the rest of the money come from?

"We need to find more efficient methods for this problem," comments Peters.

Womenfest, cont.

The Women's Resource Center commented they were very pleased with the turnout, since they had close to 400 people in attendance.

Lori Olson and Marilyn Mortell presented a dramatic comedy entitled "Speaking Briefly."

There were two large photographic exhibits titled "Black Women Achievement Against the Odds" and "A Photographic Review of the Early 1900s."

Several area organizations which provide services to women sponsored information booths and informal discussions.

The "fest" was open to the public and free child care was provided.

Fast for World Hunger

by Melissa Gross
Pointer Editor

A 24-hour fast for world hunger will be held on Tuesday, March 12, beginning at 5 p.m. and ending on Wednesday, March 13, at the same time.

Reverend Art Simmons of the Campus Peace Center is coordinating the event with the help of the United Ministries in Higher Education, Canterbury Club, Newman Student Community, UWSP Interfaith Council and the Lutheran Student Community.

"People wishing to fast can sign up and then go out and recruit sponsors who will pay them for each hour they fast," said Simmons. "All money will then be collected from those who signed up to fast in the Concourse on March 25-27."

All proceeds from the fast will go to CROP (Community Relief Overseas Project), a division of the Church World Service whose goal is to help people create for themselves a better quality of life, which can be marked by their ability to sustain themselves.

"Last semester we sponsored a one-meal fast with American Food Management," said Simmons. "Residence hall students signed up to miss a meal at DeBot or Allen and American Food Management donated the cost of each meal missed to Church World Service. The donations totaled $1,143.59."

Simmons said long-term goals for the fight against world hunger should focus on changing the government's policy on food. Simmons feels the U.S. government uses hunger relief as a means of political coercion.

"The Reagan administration insisted on tying food for Africa in with arms for Central America," said Simmons. "Congress had to O.K. both before one or the other proposals would go through. It's situations like that which slow down relief operations."

Students still wishing to sign up for the upcoming fast may do so by calling Reverend Art Simmons at 346-3678 before 5 p.m. on Tuesday, March 12.

Something to dance about

by Tom Raymond
Staff reporter

What is faster than disco, more energetic than breakdancing and older than the Charleston? No, not the polka, but Polish folk dancing.

In Stevens Point there is a Polish folk dance group, founded in 1977, calling themselves Wisla, which is Polish for the name of the main river of Poland that nearly encircles the country. In the same way, the leader of the group says Wisla encompasses some of the history of Poland.

Unlike most of the folk dances seen commonly today, such as the polka, Polish folk dancing is fast and frenzied, temperamental and impulsive as well as partially improvised. No two folk dances can ever be the same, which is one reason that there is no such thing as a "Polish" dance. The temperament and flair of the dances match the Polish character.

Wisla is a volunteer organization consisting of 15 people, including four musicians. They demonstrate the two types of Polish dance, national which occurs on a national scale, and regional which occurs in a relatively small area. One such demonstration occurred Tuesday, March 5, with free admission and refreshments. A typical night of Wisla's dancing is not just dancing however, it also consists of learning about the origins and development of Polish dances and culture.

"How will the Wolf Survive," in the Vinyl Jungle?

by Rob Taylor
Staff reporter

I know good party music when I hear it, and How Will the Wolf Survive?, the new record by a group called Los Lobos, is as fine a piece of party music as is likely to be heard this year.

Los Lobos are David Hidalgo on lead vocals and guitar, Cesar Rosas also on lead vocals and guitar, Conrad Lozano on bass and vocals, Louie Perez on drums, and newcomer Steve Berlin (formerly of the Blasters) on saxophone. Los Lobos have an amazing array of styles under their belt (this is the most diverse music to be found on an American album since Springsteen's compendium of style, "The River"), from charged rockers to manic polkas, this is hard-edged roots music.

The songs on this record sound old and new at the same time. There are clearly recognizable antecedents like '50s rockabilly, but there are also Tex-Mex flavors that have largely been missing from most new music. There never has been a popular fusion of Mexican-American music into rock and roll and Los Lobos' brand of rock-r&b-country sounds refreshing and exciting. Los Lobos successfully blend the styles of music that influenced them into original, challenging rock.

So, on to the music. The most kick-ass number is the lead-off track, "Don't Worry Baby" is a tough duelling-guitars rocker, guaranteed to send you slippin' and slidin' around your room. It's one of two songs on the LP that were co-written with co-producer (along with Berlin) T-Bone Burnett (a former Dylan sideman, and a solo artist, his best work is on the Trap Door EP).

After "Don't Worry Baby" has left you breathless, the pace slows down for "A Matter of Time," a rough, but sweet, r&b ballad. Next up is the mad polka rush of "Corrida No. 1," which is so surprising the first time you hear it that you'll probably laugh out loud. It took awhile for me to get used to the accordion (an instrument that I've hated for as long as I can remember—you know, something only Myron Floren plays), but this album has stretched my ears a bit, and now I like it.

"Our Last Night" (which also features a prominent accordion line) follows, and it's sort of a country-swing tune. Side One closes out with the '50s-style stomp, "The Breakdown" (the other song co-written by Burnett).

On the second side, the record starts hopping right away with "I Got Loaded" (on several types of substances, too), which one friend of mine has already turned into a personal anthem. "Loaded" is followed by another polka, this one sung in Spanish (for maximum incomprehension).

"Evangeline" comes after that, a 'dirty, low-down, honky-tonk rocker. "I Got to Let You Know" is a sort of amphetamine two-step.

The last two songs on the album are of a different tone. "Lil' Kind of Everything" is a dual-acoustic guitar instrumental that is quiet and somber, serving notice that if the album has been good-time music up until now, there still is reality to face. The finale, "Will the Wolf Survive?", seethes desperation. It almost sounds like a lost page from the Jackson Browne songbook, but it's grittier than

Browne ever got. The song at first seems to be quite literally about the plight of the wolf, but midway through the song, "the wolf" becomes a metaphor for anyone, or anything, that's ever been pushed to the edge:

"Standing in the pouring rain, all alone in a world that's changed, running scared now, forced to hide, in a land where he once stood with pride.... but he'll find his way by morning light."

Los Lobos are fun, but they

Grammy Award Winner, Lee Greenwood

Lee Greenwood, the Country Music Association's male vocalist of the year winner in 1983 and 1984, will perform Tuesday night, March 19, at UWSP. His concert will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the Quandt Gymnasium where his special performing guests will be members of the Gamblers, a Stevens Point country band.

The sponsoring Universities Activities Board is arranging for reserved ticket sales at ShopKo stores in Stevens Point, Wisconsin Rapids, Marshfield, Wausau and at UWSP's University Center Information Desk.

Greenwood, whose recordings are sold under the MCA label, has the current top 10 country hit, "You've Got a Good Love Comin'"; the current duet hit with Barbara Mandrell, "It Should Have Been Love by Now"; and previous hits including "Ring on Her Finger, Time on Her Hands" in 1982, "L.O.U." in 1983, "Going, Going, Gone" in 1983, and "God Bless the USA" in 1984.

He has been named as a male vocalist of the year by several magazines and organizations and won a Grammy in 1984 for the best country vocal performance-male. Radio & Records Reader's Poll chose him as the best new artist in 1983.

Greenwood began playing music professionally when he was a teenager and spent most of his first 20 years as a music arranger, band leader, show tune writer, backup singer and piano bar performer, mainly in Nevada.

He gained almost instant recognition after he signed a contract with MCA in 1981 and began writing and performing for the firm. His first release, "It Turns Me Inside Out" was on the Billboard country music charts for 22 consecutive weeks.

German Club

Sprechen Sie Deutsch? If so, you are welcome to join German Club. If not, you are welcome to join anyway. Perhaps you are wondering just what German Club is and what it does.

German Club's primary purpose is to promote interest in the language, culture and customs of the German-speaking world. It also serves as a liaison between the students and the faculty of the foreign language department. Through coordination between students and faculty, the German Club strives to provide educational and occupational opportunities as well as providing a warm social atmosphere for its members.

German Club provides a variety of activities throughout the year. A few of the ones already participated in are: Foreign Language Club picnic, gatherings at Jeremiah's Import Night, and a trip to the Folkfair in Milwaukee. Some of the tentative plans on the agenda are: Foreign Language Awareness Week, a German dinner, folk dancing, German Film Week (March 18-22), a slide show of Germany and more.

Anyone having a genuine interest in the German language, culture or customs, regardless of educational background or national origin, is cordially invited to become a member. More information can be found in the Foreign Language Lab, located in Collins Classroom Center, or by contacting one of the officers: Pat Obertin (President), Lois Hass (VP), Peggie Stafford (Secretary), Amy Forster (Treasurer), or Kay Janisse (PR).

Alpha Mu Gamma

by Jim Lauersdorf

Do the words Deutsch, Frances, Espanol or Russkiy mean anything to you? Not only are these the names of the four major foreign languages taught here, but also students of languages share a common bond at UWSP.

This common bond among UWSP foreign language students is the Eta Omicron chapter of Alpha Mu Gamma, the National Collegiate Foreign Language Honor Society. Our goals are to recognize and stimulate achievement in foreign language study, to encourage interest in other languages, cultures, and peoples and, through them, to foster international friendship and understanding.

You say you've never heard of Alpha Mu Gamma? Well, we're going to change that. In the past, we've sponsored an annual Foreign Language Banquet, picnics and other social events for our members and anyone interested in foreign languages. Just recently, some of our members attended the national convention in Kansas, where they exchanged ideas with members from around the U.S., learned some ethnic dances and were exposed to new languages.

Alpha Mu Gamma sponsors National Foreign Language Week from March 3-9. You may have seen our booth in the Concourse; we also sponsored a poster contest promoting foreign languages and a get-together for all foreign language clubs on campus.

Being an honor society, we have standards for membership. You can be a member if you:

a. Have received two grades of "A" and one of "B" or higher in university level foreign language courses.

Or,
b. Have received two grades of "A" in university level and grades of "A" in two years of high school foreign language courses.

With both criteria, you must have an overall GPR of 3.0.

Wouldn't you like to join Alpha Mu Gamma in the foreign language and culture experience? If so, contact your foreign language professor, or the foreign language department office, Room 490, Collins Classroom Center, phone 346-3036. Now is the time to check us out since we induct our new members at the annual Foreign Language Department Banquet which will be held in May.

La Liaison Francaise

Studying the French language and learning about French culture is not something that has to be limited to a classroom setting. La Liaison Francaise (French Club) was organized to provide students with the opportunity to speak French and participate in culturally-oriented activities outside the classroom.

La Liaison Francaise consists of a core group of approximately 15 students who work hard to realize the goals of the organization. Some of the activities to date have included: a seminar on programs to France, job opportunities in French-speaking countries via the Peace Corps, a wine and cheese party, Folk Fair and the Christmas party.

Activities for this semester include promotion of National Foreign Language Week (stop by our booth in the Concourse this Thursday), Mardi Gras celebration (March 10), and involvement in the French theatre April 30 and May 1 and 2.

Meetings, which are held twice a month, are announced in the Daily, The Pointer, and via posters in Collins Classroom Center.

Membership in La Liaison Francaise is open to anyone interested in learning more about the French language and culture while making new friends and having fun. For more information, contact Laura at 341-8847.

How to Flirt ON MONDAY

.....if you want a date for Friday. Nothing attracts people to each other like certain subtle signals. YOU can learn what they are and how to use them...with CONFIDENCE to make someone feel you're special. Benefit as you enjoy reading of the first-hand experiences of others, like yourself, trying to attract someone they like. No, you don't have to be beautiful, wealthy, popular or unique in any way...these tested winning ways do work for everyone willing to try them.

We know how you feel about first encounters. Maybe you are afraid to approach someone -- scared you will be rejected, or worse yet, laughed at or put down. Perhaps you're missing your chance to meet someone that you find interesting because you don't know the right way to go about it. Worry no more.

"HOW TO FLIRT ON MONDAY" was written especially for you to overcome these fears and to give you new self-assurance. Discover how to make shyness work for you. Know why "acting out of character" is always the wrong thing to do. Learn how to use the "verbal handshake" technique plus many more subtle approach ideas you have yet to think of. Read how a mere glance, a scent or smile can ignite a relationship and be sure that you're using them the right way. (You'll know you know how!) Chapters also uncover many sensitive areas no one ever tells you about but we tell it like it is... with humor and warmth. If ever you've wanted someone you like to "want to" know you then this book is a MUST! You won't put it down til it's finished.

Solving the dispharynx mystery in grouse

What started as a UWSP master's thesis turned out to be some of the most important ruffed grouse research of the decade.

by Christopher Dorsey
Environmental Editor

In 1980, Sue Marcquenski embarked on a master's project intended to unravel some of the secrets surrounding dispharynx, a roundworm parasite of ruffed grouse and other birds. Adult dispharynx burrow into the wall of a ruffed grouse's proventriculus (stomach) and latch on tightly by using two threadlike projections called cordons. It's believed that these cordons act much the same as threads on a screw in the way they secure the adult dispharynx to the stomach wall. The proventriculus will then enlarge due to the formation of extra tissue inside. This will often completely close off passage of food. The grouse then becomes weak and easy prey for opportune predators or may simply starve before an owl or fox has a chance to catch it.

To understand more about dispharynx and its effect on Wisconsin's grouse population, you must first understand the life cycle of this parasite. The grouse serves as the host species for dispharynx. The adult worms pass their eggs out via the grouse's fecal material. Once on the ground, the tiny eggs are ingested by sowbugs which in turn serve as the intermediate host. Inside the sowbug, the young larvae develop until the sowbug is eaten by a grouse chick. Once eaten by a chick, larvae grow to adults in the proventriculus and the cycle then repeats itself.

Since the project's start in 1980, Marcquenski has relied heavily on grouse hunters to supply her with the needed grouse proventriculus. No one feels the impact of the bottom of the grouse cycle more than Wisconsin grouse hunters. According to Marcquenski, "Grouse hunters, especially at the Sandhill Wildlife Area, have been fantastic over the last few years in assisting with specimen collecting. Some hunters have even offered to comb the grounds looking for sowbugs (the intermediate host)." Grouse hunters too want the answer to dispharynx.

Of the 52 counties where grouse proventriculi were studied, 31 counties showed the parasite—most being in Southwestern Wisconsin. Marathon County in Central Wisconsin, however, has been the county with the most consistent data during the five-year study.

In 1982, the Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources contracted Marcquenski to continue further research on the dispharynx problem. It seems the grouse the DNR were capturing in Southwestern Wisconsin to be traded with Missouri for wild turkeys were dying before they could even be shipped. Through financial backing by the DNR, Marcquenski concentrated the dispharynx study on counties in Southwestern Wisconsin.

Examination of southwestern grouse revealed a high prevalence of dispharynx worms in the counties of Richland, Sauk, Crawford and Vernon. The prevalence of the worm decreased in birds from more northern counties. Meanwhile, as grouse hunters will attest, 1982 proved to be another low year for grouse and in 1983 the population dwindled even lower.

Just what effect was dispharynx having on overall grouse populations? Marcquenski searched for the answer as she continued the study. In 1983, she again found a very high prevalence of dispharynx in extreme southwestern counties. However, the research took a new and unexpected twist in 1983. During the 1981 study of Marathon Marcquenski showed what researchers call an "inverse correlation." That is, as grouse populations declined, cases of dispharynx grew.

The direct effect of dispharynx on grouse numbers was likely, but why only the prevalence in Southwest Wisconsin? Marcquenski reached a block in her research until she searched previous literature on the subject.

Grouse hunters supply the grouse for research.

County in Central Wisconsin, no dispharynx were found in the 56 grouse examined. In a similar sample of 55 birds taken in Marathon County in 1983, 18 of the birds proved infected with dispharynx.

Why the dramatic shift? What happened differently in 1983 that would account for the dispharynx increase? Marcquenski delved deeper in search of the dispharynx impact on the grouse cycle. By graphing the relative number of ruffed grouse harvested from 1980 to 1983 and the number of infected grouse,

She discovered that a researcher conducted studies on dispharynx in blue grouse in British Columbia. His 1955 research concluded that in areas where dispharynx was present, the grouse population tended to be more stable and didn't show the extreme highs and lows of the cycle. This was exactly what was happening in Southwest Wisconsin. Grouse populations in southern counties tend to be more stable than those in the north, where high fluctuations are the rule.

Through 1984, Marcquenski had examined over 3,000 grouse proventriculi. Another surprise fell upon Marcquenski's research in 1984. After looking at 350 proventriculi last year, noticeable cases of dispharynx were showing up in the extreme northern counties of Washburn, Marinette, Forest and Iron; areas where dispharynx appeared to be absent in previous years. Again, Marcquenski was stumped. What allowed for only the occasional infection of northern birds?

Another search of the literature revealed that in 1937, a researcher by the name of Boughton studied grouse parasites in three separate areas of Minnesota. Boughton found a difference in the types of parasites affecting the grouse in every area that he studied. Boughton also felt that other factors such as the distribution of the host and intermediate host species, topography, vegetation and climate should all be studied to understand differences in parasite distribution.

Step-by-step, Marcquenski considered each of these factors to find out their effect on dispharynx in grouse. It is generally considered that parasite eggs survive better in heavy soils because of their moisture-holding capacity. This allows the eggs a longer opportunity of being eaten by sowbugs. In Wisconsin, the heavier soils are found in the south as opposed to the northern counties. This gave at least one reason explaining the higher frequency of dispharynx in southwestern counties.

Fisher Season Due to Open

Wisconsin trappers will have a new furbearer to add to their catch next winter as a fisher trapping season will be opening in December. Evidently the DNR has determined that there is a sizable population up north that could use some "culling." More details on the new season are due out this fall in the 1985 edition of the Wisconsin Trapping Regulations booklet.

NWF Protests Southern Forest Plans

The National Wildlife Federation has charged that the U.S. Forest Service is violating the Endangered Species Act by proposing timber practices that would destroy the habitat of the red-cockaded woodpecker in southern forests. Forest Service plans call for eliminating tens of thousands of acres of old-growth forest that serves as habitat for the endangered woodpecker.

Mother Saves Record-Book Mule Rack

If it hadn't been for the energetic endeavors of Bill Barcus' mother, the young lad would never have known he shot a new world-record buck. According to Outdoor Life magazine, Bill shot the massive buck during the 1979 Colorado bow season. Due to the buck being quite a distance from the nearest road, Bill decided to leave the bulky antlers behind and pack out only the meat. Mrs. Barcus happened to join up with her son at the kill and took it upon herself to carry the "wondrous" antlers out of the mountains for her son. Little did she know that she was carrying a set of antlers that could possibly rewrite the record book!

Evidently, word got around on the huge horns with the eventual arrival of a Pope and Young Club scorer who taped out the massive measurements. At 203 1/2 points, the buck exceeds the current record of 197 points, which belongs to another Colorado mule deer that was taken in 1969. Official certification as the Pope and Young Club's World Record for typical mule deer is likely to come at the club's biennial meeting in Bismarck, North Dakota, in late April. Surprisingly, the antlers were dimensionally equal to the largest typical mule deer known to exist—the Boone and Crockett record, belonging to Doug Burris Jr. The main beams taped 28 1/2 inches, and the greatest outside measurement was an astounding 38 inches! "To think if it hadn't been for my mother!" Bill told Outdoor Life reporters.

Germans Face Choice: Fast Cars or Forests

Problems with acid rain may soon force West Germans to choose between their love of driving at unrestricted speeds and saving their endangered forests. Research showing that acid rain has already damaged up to half the country's forests have sparked a national campaign for slower speeds on the autobahns. Experts say that nitrogen oxide emissions from automobiles are the prime culprits in acid rain. Motorists are told that even slowing down to 80 miles an hour could help halt the destruction!

CAMP Program Makes Woods Safer for Hunting

Thanks to the Campaign Against Marijuana Planting (CAMP) task force, California's forests were made safer for hunters this past season.

Over the past 10 years, marijuana growers have used the backwoods for concealment of their illegal plants and have threatened to shoot at any hunters who strayed too close. According to U.S. Forest Service Law Enforcement Director Ernie Andersen, "Evidence of illegal marijuana cultivations has been found in every national forest in the system."

Last year, 27 local, state and federal agencies pooled their equipment, resources and manpower in an attempt to stem this problem. The result, CAMP, was a law-enforcement partnership that cut and burned over 130 tons of marijuana. With the help of Army National Guard and U.S. Customs Service helicopters, officials confiscated and hauled out irrigation equipment, booby traps and an arsenal of semi-automatic and automatic weapons from remote mountain sites. Luckily for hunters, CAMP was a success. But as growers have felt the increasing pressure from the organization, they have been scattering into neighboring states. In response, authorities throughout the country have taken a close look at CAMP and many are expected to adopt similar programs. With California's second CAMP session well underway, State Attorney General John Van de Kamp said, "We aim to send a message to the marijuana cultivators in this state that we intend to run them out of business."

Early visions of spring

by Darlene Loehrke
Staff reporter

The snow is melting leaving sidewalks covered with water. Bare ground, hidden from view for so many weeks, can be seen. People, weary of thick winter mittens and scarves, shed their garments for lighter clothes much as a butterfly leaves its cocoon for the freedom of lighter wings. Even the birds seem to flutter with a new vitality as if the sun that is melting the snow is also releasing them from their sombre winter mood.

At the time I'm writing this, it has been warm for several days. To many, thoughts of spring are budding and swelling. I think they best beware, calm their haste, sit back and wait.

Something is missing. Some vague scent that the spring wind ushers in has not yet arrived. That light, ambiguous presence that ever so subtly sets senses on end is not yet here.

Spring, the reserved, formal madame that she is, always sends a calling card ahead to announce the nearness of her arrival. Her footman carries it on the brisk wind that arrives cold and harsh, yet overnight sets things stirring. You may go to bed shivering, hiding under covers longing to stay there until the world is green and alive, sick of snow and slush and salt that seem to find their way into even the most concealed corners of your life.

Some time in the night you awake to the faint, almost imperceptible drip of water.

Thinking it only a faucet you return to your dreams of warm green grass and daffodils.

In the morning as you leave the house, you notice that something is different. The sky is ominous and gray and seems to press down upon the land with a smothering presence. These are not clouds like those that have dumped snow upon you for so long. These are much more pressing. They seem to want to release some torrential force but can't and the pressure keeps building and building.

You notice that all is quiet... but for that faint, ever so... is it really there? A dripping that sends the blood flowing and you can't quite tell why. Something's there. The wind that yesterday turned cheeks pink, today is so moist and so full of some essence that you feel your face expecting it too to be moist. Looking around you feel as if someone is watching you but you see only the snow-covered bushes. Spring is, as Guy Wetmore Carryl put it, "at the wing, and waiting for her cue."

Today, even with all its life-giving warmth, is not the beginning of spring. That elusive footman has not yet arrived so we must be content to wait. Spring, as of yet, is not here.

Erosion: Wisconsin style

Wisconsin's soil is eroding faster than at any time in our history—even worse than in the Dust Bowl days of the Thirties. Every year, 79 million tons of soil erode from Wisconsin land. That's over 200,000 tons of soil every day, or 17,000 dump trucks full of our precious resource—soil.

Current levels of soil erosion threaten agricultural productivity and cause substantial off-site damages. Cropland erosion rates are especially high in the southern one-third of the state, where the average is 8 to 10 tons-acre-year, or more than twice the tolerable limits. State-be required for all shotgun hunting in 1986. Two other states along the Central Flyway—Iowa and Kansas—may soon take action to limit use of lead shot, too.

Lutheran Laymen Build Nature Trail for the Blind

A group of college students from several Midwestern universities recently banded together to construct a 1,500-foot nature trail for blind children at Camp CILA (Central Illinois Lutheran Camp Association). The trail, located on a 210-acre area operated by the Central Illinois District and its Lutheran Laymen's League groups, will provide weekend campers and the handicapped with not only an environment to share Christ with one another, but an environmentally-oriented experience as well.

"Besides the blind using the trail, we could blindfold sighted people in the future and show them how to use their other senses to 'see' nature around them," said project coordinator Kris Buelmann. The project received its funding through camp funds and local businesses which provided the needed materials.

Oldest Reptile Tracks Discovered

A Kentucky stonemason has discovered the fossilized footprints of a lizard 310 million years old—possibly the oldest evidence of reptile life on Earth. The six-inch creature lived about the time when reptiles were branching off from the amphibians, says Nicholas Holton, a Smithsonian fossil specialist.

Contaminated Groundwater Found in Every State

It looks as though Wisconsin is not alone in its problems with groundwater contamination. Chemical contamination of groundwater—the source of drinking water for half the U.S. population—has spread to every state in the union, according to a report by the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment. Sticklers for the obvious, EPA officials then admitted in a draft report that its system for monitoring leaks from toxic waste dumps into underground water supplies was not working.

After considering soil types, Marcquenski looked at the distribution of sowbugs in Wisconsin. She found sowbugs as far north as Bayfield County and as far south as Richland County. Leaving no stone unturned, sowbugs seemed to be everywhere. Therefore, it didn't appear that the sowbug distribution held much significance to dispharynx in Wisconsin grouse.

It was in Marcquenski's next step that she may have discovered the key to the dispharynx question. For the dispharynx larvae to develop inside a grouse's proventriculus, it must first reach a certain mature point inside the sowbug. At a temperature less than 52 degrees Fahrenheit, the larval stages will not reach the mature state inside the sowbug. When the temperatures are increased to 70 degrees Fahrenheit, it temperature to 78 degrees Fahrenheit, it takes only 18 days for dispharynx larvae to reach maturity inside a sowbug. The sig-feels that the warmer temperatures in Southwest Wisconsin account for the consistent higher prevalence of dispharynx in those counties.

In the event of cool springs in the northeast, the larvae are not mature enough inside the sowbugs to develop into adult worms once ingested by a grouse chick. This could explain the reason for Marathon County showing no sign of dispharynx in 1981 when the spring was cool and in 1983 following a warm spring, the 18 cases that were reported.

The last element needing to be proved was the distribution of the host (grouse). Wisconsin does have grouse throughout the state—although some grouse hunters may disagree at times. However, there are differences between the structures of the northern and southern populations. Some of the differences can be seen in topography and vegetation. As an example, in Vilas County in the northern part of the state, there is excellent grouse habitat. There you'll find continuous forest with openings, lowlands for broods, good mature aspen and birch for adults. Marcquenski feels that birds in this area are finding enough habitat that they aren't concentrating in only a few specific areas.

On the other hand, in the coulee region of Southwest Wisconsin, you'll find forested hilltops and river valleys that sometimes have agricultural fields mixed between them. This does create a lot of edge which grouse like, but Marcquenski feels this limits the optimal brood habitat in certain local areas. This can create problems for grouse chicks if too many birds are concentrated in a certain area and the birds are infected with dispharynx. The fecal material will then be more concentrated which increases the odds of sowbugs ingesting dispharynx eggs. To support this, Marcquenski also found that spring drumming densities are higher in Southern Wisconsin as opposed to the northern part of the state.

Through Marcquenski's work, biologists can more effectively manage Wisconsin's diverse and unique grouse population. When upland biologists are better able to understand problems such as dispharynx, grouse hunters are going to be the long-term beneficiaries.

takes dispharynx an average of 36 days to reach maturity. Proportionally, if you raise the temnificance of this is that the first week in June is the time when most grouse broods are hatching in Wisconsin. For the larvae to be ready for grouse chicks to eat, they must begin developing inside the sowbugs at least 18-36 days prior to the grouse hatch. Therefore, timing plays a critical role in whether or not the grouse chicks become infected.

Now to understand why the prevalence of dispharynx is lower in Northeastern Wisconsin, just look at the average May temperatures for that region. It turns out that the average May temperature ranges from 48 to 58 degrees Fahrenheit in Northeastern Wisconsin. Contrast this with Southwestern Wisconsin where temperatures range from 54 to 62 degrees Fahrenheit in May. Although temperatures on south-facing slopes may even be warmer, resulting in a faster development time for the larvae. In other words, Marcquenski wide there is about three times as much erosion from water as from wind, although the Central Sands area erosion from wind is more than twice that caused by water. Soil erosion is not inevitable. Conservation practices can cut erosion down to tolerable rates. Yet, erosion continues to worsen for a variety of reasons.

The State Land Conservation Board, attached to the Department of Agriculture, Trade and Consumer Protection (DATCP), adopted 12 recommendations for bringing cropland erosion under control to tolerable levels by the year 2000. They boldly asked for a substantial amount of county cost-sharing money but required farmers benefiting from the farmland preservation program property tax relief to also meet these soil erosion goals, called "cross-compliance." The governor included these provisions in his budget.

The governor did not include the recommendation of the State Land Conservation Board that, to ensure reaching the year 2000 goal, the Land Conservation Board be given regulatory oversight of county programs and the power to enforce state minimum standards in that county if the interim 1990-1993 goals are not met. The governor views this as politically unacceptable to the agricultural community, despite the testimony of farm leaders to the contrary.

We agree that control of soil erosion is a very serious problem deserving state funding, however, a flood of new money and encouragement of county programs, "the carrots," will not necessarily solve the problem. If interim goals are not met, this budget should include the mechanism, "the stick," to ensure compliance. The governor's budget did not include funding (estimated at $300,000 per county) to implement erosion control plans in the counties which have completed their plans (Trempealeau and Lincoln), or will soon complete their plans (Grant, Green, LaFayette, Pepin, Pierce and St. Croix). We want these funds restored in order to begin erosion control measures, such as conservation tillage, terraces and contour strips, in these counties which have the highest rates of erosion.

Pointers head to K.C. for third straight year

by Alan Lemke
Sports Editor

UWSP 72, UWS 43

There's an old saying in the sporting world that goes, "It's hard to beat a team three times in one year." Well, the UWSP Pointers obviously pay no attention to proverbial statements. This was evident by Pointers' third victory over UW-Stout this season, this one coming in the NAIA District 14 semifinal game at Quandt Fieldhouse, 72-43.

But, third game or not, Pointer coach Dick Bennett said this was not a factor they were concerned with going into the game.

"We never addressed that issue of playing them for the third time. We simply dwelled on trying to do the best job we could, and if that wasn't enough we would live with that."

Point came out hard in the first half jumping out to a 6-0 lead. However, the Blue Devils were able to keep it close until midway through the period when the Pointers hit on three in a row to take a 10-point advantage at 22-12. They then came back and hit three more, two by Terry Porter and one Kirby Kulas margin, to stretch the halftime layup to 32-16.

better chance of making them than missing them, and we just hit them."

Point also had an 11-5 rebounding advantage at the half, another fact Bennett was pleased with.

"I thought we did a much better job on the boards and after their initial thrust I thought we did a fine job of taking care of the lane."

When the teams returned for the second half, a string of Point steals and Stout turnovers quickly gave Point a 43-20 edge. Then, when Dimitrich Roseboro grabbed another steal for Point, Porter took the pass and slammed it home, to the delight of the crowd, which seemed to seal the Blue Devils' fate. After this, the Devils were only able to come within 24 points of their victors.

With about six and a half minutes left, the Pointers' Purple Gang took to the floor to wipe up what was left of the Blue Devils. Although their performance was less impressive than that of the starters, Bennett was glad they got into the game.

"I'm happiest about it, not necessarily for the rest of the starters, because they'll have a day in between anyhow, but because they got a chance to play more than two minutes. It's I'm proud of the way they played."

Point did make one line-up change before the Stout game. Roseboro started in place of Mike Janse who had started since his return from an ankle injury. Bennett explained this move.

"I thought Dimitrich did a good job out top and Terry was more active off the ball, and we were able to give ourselves a boost with Mike coming off the bench. Mike accepted his role and did the very best he could." Bennett added, "He should feel very good about his performance."

Porter and Kulas shared top scoring honors by dropping in 16 points apiece while Tim Naegeli added 15 for the Pointer cause.

Point will take to the floor again Wednesday, when they meet UW-Eau Claire in the district title game.

Mintz offered his prediction for the game.

"No question in my mind that Point will beat Eau Claire. Eau Claire will be much tougher than the last time, but I'd bet on Point."

Bennett tried to hold back on any predictions by simply concluding, "What it means is, Kansas City's going to get a good representative."

Co-captains Janse and Porter hold aloft the District 14 championship trophy.

UWSP 52, UW-EC 41

The Pointers took to the floor last night in what may have been called a "rainbow game." This seems like a fitting description, because after the Pointers had beaten UW-Eau Claire in the District 14 championship game, they had a pot of gold waiting for them at the end in the form of a berth in the NAIA National Tournament in Kansas City.

The contest started out as a tooth and nail battle, as both teams played solid defense and managed to keep the score within two points. However, midway through the first stanza, the Pointers came up with some excellent defensive efforts to put themselves in the driver's seat by a score of 16-8. The Pointers were able to hold this lead as they went into the locker room at the half leading, 24-16.

The picture started to look dim for the Pointers when they came back out for the second half. Three hoops by Buglod Rick Dahl cut the Pointer lead to two, and by halfway through the period, Point found themselves trailing by one point for the first time in the game since the opening basket by Eau Claire.

Bennett said this was a concern to him, and he was just hoping it wouldn't cause his team to falter.

"It was of great concern to us that we were not able to put the ball down, and I was afraid that we would come back on defense and do some reckless things, and a couple of times we did, but there were enough timeouts in there where the guys could get their acts together."

After almost three minutes without anyone scoring, Porter connected on an 18-footer from the right side to give Point a 32-31 lead, and from that point on the momentum all went to the Pointers. Excellent free throw shooting late in the game secured a 52-41 victory for the Pointers.

In fact, the free throw shooting was so good the Pointers set a new UWSP free throw shooting mark, dropping a perfect 100 percent of their charity tosses. The previous mark was 22 of 23, set in 1979-80 and again in 1983-84. The Pointers nailed a cool 18 for 18 in last night's contest. Bennett felt that this was a reflection on the poise of his team.

"That's quite a phenomenal statistic. When they can step to the line in a game like this and nail those shots, that's a real testimony to the kids."

The overall tough play of the Pointers and the Buglods was an area that Bennett had some interesting insights into.

"I think when you get two excellent teams together nothing will come easy. There will be periods of tightness. There will be plays that the fans feel maybe shouldn't be made, but what you have to appreciate is that every time we made a defensive mistake, Eau Claire capitalized. So two really good clubs are going to negate one another for a great share of the game. It's just a matter of who can get the upperhand. And, I think we got it at just the right spot."

Once again the man with the hot hand for the Pointers was Terry Porter. Porter racked up 22 points, grabbed three rebounds, and added two assists. Although there was a stretch where the Pointer shots were not falling, Porter felt that it was not because they were doing something different.

"We took our usual shots that we do during the game, but the rim just didn't take them."

One of the keys to the Pointer victory was the ability to shut off Buglod standout Chester Smith. Tim Naegeli was given the chore of guarding the 6-7 senior. Naegeli said there are no real tricks to stopping Smith outside of good strong defense.

"You've just got to go out hard, give good pressure on the ball, and keep your hands in his face when he shoots."

From here on in, the chore gets that much tougher for the Pointers. They head to Kansas City to begin the tournament March 14, and a totally new season lies ahead of them. Bennett said the tournament takes on a different light from any other game his team has played to this point.

"When you get down there (K.C.) everybody has fought through their district to get there, so there are no stiffs there."

Pointers: Porter 8-15, 6-6, 22; Olson 3-5, 4-4, 10; Kulas 4-10, 0-4, 8; Naegeli 1-3, 6-6, 8; Janse 1-4, 0-0, 2; Roseboro 0-1, 2-2, 2. Buglods: Dahl 7-13, 3-3, 14; Krueger 3-5, 6-7, 12; Smith 4-12, 0-0, 8; Blair 2-5, 0-2, 4; Busby 0-0, 0-0, 0.

Porter's dunk brought the crowd to their feet and the Blue Devils to their knees.

Bennett said he was very happy with the way his team shot in the first half (68 percent). He noted three 17-footers by Porter and a 16-footer by Kulas as standouts.

"We shot the ball from the baseline and those shots were probably 15-foot shots or better. Those are shots that if you get them on rhythm you've got a really great for them to get that kind of playing time, especially in a tournament game."

Although Stout was knocked out of any further post-season play, Blue Devil coach Dwaine Mintz did have words of praise for his team, which is considered one of the most improved in the WSUC this season.

"The kids had a good season.

Bennett and Pointers earn All-WSUC honors

MADISON—Three members of the Wisconsin State University Conference champion UWSP have been named to the loop's all-league team which was announced recently. In addition, Pointer coach Dick Bennett is the conference coach of the year.

Named for the second straight year is All-American guard Terry Porter, while gaining their first mention on the honor team are junior center Kirby Kulas and sophomore forward Tim Naegeli.

The three were major forces in helping lead the Pointers to their fourth straight WSUC championship with a 14-2 season record. UWSP, ranked No. 2 in the final NAIA national poll of the season, took a 22-4 record into the NAIA District 14 semifinals Monday.

Only WSUC runnerup UW-Eau Claire joined UWSP in larding more than one player on the team with the selection of Chester Smith and Rick Dahl. Rounding out the honor squad is repeat selection Mark Linde of UW-Whitewater along with newcomers Linus Vander Wyst, UW-La Crosse; Kurt Stelplflug, UW-Stout; Todd Potokar, UW-Oshkosh; and Brian Jass, UW-River Falls.

Kulas, a 6-6, 200-pound junior from Medford, is scoring at a clip of 11.2 points per contest. He is also averaging a team-high total of 6.0 rebounds a game and has passed off for 1.4 assists per outing. He has shot .509 and .839 percent from the field and free throw line, respectively. He leads the team in blocked shots with 23.

Naegeli, a 6-7, 180-pounder who prepped at Racine's Lutheran High School, was the only sophomore named to the 10-man all-league team. He is averaging 11.0 points, 4.7 rebounds and 1.5 assists per game. He has led NAIA District 14 in field goal percentage all season and has made .667 percent of his shots. He has also converted .674 percent of his charity shots.

Kirby Kulas

Tim Naegeli

Porter, a 6-3, 195-pound senior from Milwaukee, possibly the most complete player in the conference, is averaging 19.3 points, 4.9 rebounds and 4.4 assists per game. He has converted .568 percent of his field goals and .817 percent of his free throws. He also leads the Pointers in the defensive categories of steals (42), forced turnovers (26), and recoveries (16).

The highly honored Porter is currently the second all-time leading scorer in UWSP history with 1,494 points. He is also first in steals (168), second in assists (426), 15th in rebounding (423), fourth in field goal percentage (.586) and 10th in free throw percentage (.788).

Bennett, the 1983-84 NAIA national coach of the year, earned the WSUC coach of the year award for the second time as he was also accorded the honor in 1982-83. This year's Pointer team overcame the unexpected losses of key personnel and set a new league mark for defensive point average (46.4 points a game) while winning the title.

his baskets are key ones. I believe he can be as good as he wants to be. This award is as much a recognition of his potential as it is recognition of his achievement."

Terry Porter—"I don't know what more this young man can do for us. His roles are numerous and he always delivers somehow. His contribution has been monumental."

The ninth year head coach of the Pointers also reflected on his own award.

"I feel honored to receive this award. It is an award given to me because of the efforts of our team and staff. A coaching award is clearly a team award."

Lady runners grab sixth place finish

The UWSP women's track and field team continued its strong early season showing by capturing sixth place in the John Tierney Classic which was held in Milwaukee Saturday.

Host UW-Milwaukee easily won the meet with 174 points while Marquette was second with 79. Rounding out the top six places were DePaul, 70; UW-Whitewater, 45.5; UW-Oshkosh, 44.5; and UWSP, 40.

All-American Michelle Riedi, a junior from De Pere, was again the individual standout for UWSP as she captured first place in the high jump with a top effort of 5'8". She had already qualified for the NCAA Division III National Meet.

Cathy Ausloos added a third place finish in the 600 yard run with a clocking of 1:28.3.

Also placing third was the 880 yard relay team of Carlene Willkom, Reidi, Barb Knuese and Ausloos with a time of 1:53.3, and the one-mile relay foursome of Annette Zuidema, Reidi, Kathy Seidl and Ausloos with a time of 3:13.0.

UWSP coach Rick Witt, who accompanied the team to the meet, felt it performed well against some outstanding competition.

"I thought we had some good efforts against scholarship schools," Witt praised. "We were simply out of our league in terms of competition."

"In addition, the women were short-handed as a couple of key people did not run."

"Michelle Riedi's performance in the high jump certainly sticks out. She is so good that she does well against any competition."

"Cathy Ausloos is the runner of the week. She established a new school record in the 600-yard run and also anchored the two relays which placed."

"We also had many fine performances by people who didn't score, but noticeable improvements were made."

The Lady Pointers return to competition Thursday with a meet at UW-Oshkosh.

Stepanski wins; Dogfish sixth

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — The UWSP men's swim team received another second place finish from standout Jeff Stepanski along with a third from Pete Samuelson and as a team finished sixth in the NAIA National Swimming and Diving Championships which concluded here Saturday.

Drury College won the meet with 368 points while Central Washington was second with 350. Rounding out the top six were Denver, 299; Bemidji State, 265; UW-Eau Claire, 127.5 and UWSP, 125.0.

Stepanski, a talented junior from Menasha, added a second place finish in the 100 yard freestyle to his already impressive list of tournament accomplishments. He led the race going into the turn but lost his lead at that point and lost out on first place in a photo-finish. He had a time of :46.35 while the winning time was :46.28. In the preliminary competition, he set a new UWSP record in the event with a time of :46.28.

In Thursday's competition Stepanski became UWSP's third-ever national champion as he won the 50 yard freestyle. He added a fourth in the 100 freestyle on Friday.

Samuelson, a senior from Park Ridge, Ill., placed third in the 200 yard backstroke for the Pointers with a time of 1:56.28. He had also placed fourth in the 100 backstroke on Friday.

UWSP's only other individual top 12 finish was turned in by Greg Schneider in the 200 breaststroke where he was 10th with a clocking of 2:11.64.

Jeff Stepanski

The Pointers' final points were earned by the 400 freestyle relay foursome of Stepanski, Ken Brumbaugh, Steve Davis and Scot Moser with a fifth place effort. The group established a new UWSP record in the event with a time of 3:08.46.

Point coach Red Blair expressed satisfaction with the showing of his team in the high powered meet.

"I couldn't have asked for a better effort from this team," Blair praised. "Each and every guy here laid it on the line and gave us his best."

"Jeff Stepanski proved that he was the class of the sprints. Had he not had a poor turn in the 100 he would have had a national championship in that event too."

"Pete Samuelson has proved for many years that he is one of the best backstrokers around and he showed that again down here."

"I am really proud of these guys. It would have been nice to finish ahead of Eau Claire, but the diving points again did us in. We did a heck of a job in the water and really outscored them there."

Earning All-American honors for the Pointers were Stepanski, Samuelson, Schneider, Brumbaugh, Davis and Moser.

Blair was also in the spotlight here as he was inducted into the NAIA National Hall of Fame.

Zakrzewski drops first match

by Ron Ankley
Staff reporter

AUGUSTANA, Ill.—A takedown was all that separated Bill Zakrzewski from advancing in the NCAA Division III wrestling tournament here last weekend.

Zakrzewski, UWSP's lone representative, came ever so close in gaining the necessary two points. He gambled and lost, bowing 9-6 to Scott Bloom of Olivet, Mich., in the 190-pound quarterfinals.

"A takedown would have won the match," said Pointer coach John Munson. "He got down with seven seconds to go and he had to try something—he went for broke with a head seal but he couldn't get it. Instead, the other guy got it."

The match was close throughout, with neither wrestler able to gain the upperhand through the first two periods. Bloom, the No. 6 seed, held a precarious 7-5 lead with 30 seconds remaining in the third period when Zakrzewski scored an escape, making it 7-6. The gamble, however, didn't pay off as the clock ticked off the final seconds.

Zakrzewski was denied a spot in the wrestle-backs when Bloom lost his next match in overtime.

Zakrzewski, a junior with sophomore eligibility, concluded the season with a 12-6 record. Munson felt his lone wrestler fought valiantly to be among the best 16 wrestlers in the country.

"Bill belonged here and represented our school well," said Munson. "Just to compete here is quite an honor."

Zakrzewski, actually, was a walk-on for Munson. He didn't wrestle first semester and joined the squad after a phone call before the second semester started.

"We called him up at Christmas time and asked him to come out," said Munson. Zakrzewski found time to wrestle while juggling school and a night shift at United Parcel Service, prompting Munson to say, "We let him have a few days off for nationals."

The Wisconsin State University Conference held its own in the 80-team field. WSUC champ River Falls had two national champions—Dave Brandbold (177) and Matt Renn (Hwt.)—on its way to a third place finish, behind national champion Trenton State, N.J.

The third place Falcons may have wound up on top if not for losing wrestlers in conference and regional action.

"The problem was we beat each other up in conferences and regionals and not enough were able to go," said Munson. "River Falls could have taken their whole team and won."

It was another story for the Pointers, whose season could be divided into two stages—a successful first half followed by a second half marred with injuries. A strong regional showing added luster to the season for Munson.

"Once we started getting guys back healthy, we were all right," he said. "We started off the season with a bang, going 6-0, then we lost four conference matches and came up wounded."

"Looking at individual competition, it looked good. We had eight guys win 15 or more matches for us this season."

Senior co-captains Shane Boehnen and Scott Klein closed out their collegiate careers for UWSP.

Thinclads bring home first place invitational trophy

by Kent Walstrom
Staff reporter

The UWSP men's track team, which has shown continuing potential through the opening weeks of the season, delivered another impressive showing with a victory at the John Tierney Invitational track and field meet in Milwaukee last weekend.

Boostered by five first places and a team effort that registered UWSP in 16 of 17 events, the Pointers ended the day with 139 points to claim top honors in the nine-team field.

UW-Milwaukee managed 131 points in finishing second, followed by UW-Oshkosh, 127, and UW-Whitewater, 103. Also participating but far behind in total points were Parkside, Elmhurst, Platteville, Carroll and Carthage.

Scott Laurent, who led the Pointers with a first place finish in the triple jump (46'10"), missed the national qualifying distance by two inches and earned praise from Coach Rick Witt with the effort.

"Scott did a great job for us today. His best jump was just short of the national qualifying distance, but it was two and a half feet better than any of his previous jumps."

Arnie Schraeder notched a victory in the mile run (4:13), as did Mike Walden in the pole vault (15'2"), Ric Perona in the intermediate hurdles (:24.5), and Tom Peterson in the 880 yard dash (1:55.5).

UWSP added three second place finishes, including Mike Nelson in the 1000 yard run (2:19.3), Rod Wegner in the high jump (6'6"), and Jim Bednar in the intermediate hurdles (:25.7).

The Pointers also strung together eight third place finishes in the win.

"This was the nicest indoor meet that we've been to all season, and the competition was excellent," said Witt, who gave his team some extra rest in preparation for the meet. "We definitely saw the real team effort come through. We don't have any superstars, but we have a solid group of good athletes which make this a very fun year."

The Pointers will be put to the test again this Saturday, when they head to Oshkosh for another meet at the Kolf Sports Center.

AAU medals go to Point kickers

by Eric Post
Staff reporter

During the weekend of February 23-24, the A.A.U. held its annual Winter Games competition in Muskegon, Michigan. The Winter Games, with such events as the biathlon, the luge, cross-country skiing, and wrestling, as well as team rosters carrying some of the most well-known names in world class competitive athletes, has all the trappings of the Olympics, except for one thing: the Olympic Games doesn't include karate as one of its international sports. The A.A.U., on the other hand, does sponsor karate tournaments.

And what a tournament they sponsored that weekend. Saturday's competition saw a congregation of America's finest, most highly rated karate competitors, all vying for the top honors in what is considered to be one of the most disciplined sports in existence, hoping to come away with what is the most coveted sports award in existence; the gold medal.

Two Stevens Point men competed in the 1985 Winter Games, and both of them nearly captured that award. Tony DeSardi, a fourth degree black belt, and Jay Karner, first degree black belt, both brought home silver medals in the Heavyweight and Middleweight divisions respectively. DeSardi, Wisconsin chairman of the A.A.U. and instructor of UWSP karate classes, swept through the tournament with all the skill and tenacity acquired through his many years in karate, but was stopped short of the gold in the final championship round where he fought a close, hard hitting match.

Karner, who also teaches karate classes at UWSP, fought a comeback match. Losing in an early round to a competitor on the World Games circuit, Karner saw that his only chance at gaining a placement finish lie in battling his way through the following rounds to the finals. And that he did, in an amazing display of technique and proficiency that left his adversaries cleanly outscored and which placed him in the highest possible standings allowing one defeat.

This was the first time karate was included in multi-sport competition by the A.A.U. and DeSardi said that karate's overall good showing in the games proved to the A.A.U. the importance of karate as an American sport. DeSardi also said that he thinks the inclusion of karate in other nationally and internationally sponsored events is imminent, and that brings karate one step closer to being included into the Olympic Games.

Both DeSardi and Karner are members of the United States Karate Team, and DeSardi has recently returned from the world championship tournament held in Holland.

again play the key role. We need to combine our distinctive innovation and tradition with the global pool of shared achievements. We must attain a federation of human cultural contributions.

One of the most remarkable things about the life of mankind is the fashion in which particular groups work out a culture which can be so distinctive. We should not only know of these cultures but we must be able to enter into their meaning and quality. Students should be encouraged to elect many courses in the history and in the literature of various nations. Every step in disciplined thought as to the fashion in which men of various cultures have lived and achieved has its own great value.

cause he and my mother were separated shortly after their brief, but passionate, affair.

Legend has it that my father had begun a large celebration to commemorate that unforgettable night. My mother has passed on, 15 years now, because of the lost love of this mysterious man.

I am all that remains to retain their undying love. Therefore, I have sworn that I will find my father and ask him to take the throne as king. But alas, my evil Uncle Louis seeks the throne for his own, and is at this moment plotting to kill both me and my father. His men are everywhere; no one is safe.

I must reach my father on my birthday. I beg anyone having any knowledge of my father to contact me. I already have acquired a small group of trusted friends. They graciously offered to aid me in my quest. But I must not reveal their identity, although they have a code name: B.U.R.N.O.U.T.S.

Please help me, anyone!!!!!! (and the plot thickens...)

Game plan.

Success in basketball requires plenty of training, good coaching and team play. And it requires a game plan.

At McDonald's®, our game plan is simple. We have the team to produce winners every season.

Winners like Quarter Pounder® Sandwiches (weight before cooking 4 oz., or 113.4 gm.), Big Mac®

Sandwiches, Golden French Fries, and Thick Shakes.

And our game plan includes careful handling. We never drop the ball when it comes to service. Prompt and courteous — whether you're home team or visitor.

So, before or after the next battle on the hardwood, include McDonald's in your game plan.

UAB brings you Monty Python's 'The Meaning of Life,' starring Graham Chapman, John Cleese, Terry Gilliam, Eric Idle, Terry Jones and Michael Palin. In this scathing social satire, the sacrilegious satirical six have taken up the monumental task of explaining the meaning of life. The results are pungent, hilarious and priceless views of sex, religion, birth, war and death. This relentless and irreverent insanity leaves nothing or no one untouched. Monty Python tackles life and wrestles it to the ground in the most savagely hilarious, rude and amusing, vulgar and comic, gross and sidesplitting film you will ever see. A Monty Python vignette, 'The Crimson Permanent Assurance,' a wittily conceived and executed fable that views business as a pirate saga precedes and later invades the feature film. The Mr. Cressote scene is guaranteed to make you vomit laughter. Shows are at 7 and 9 p.m. in the Program Banquet Room of the University Center. Come and discover the true meaning of life!
