Budget Allocations

SGA talks, organizations question

by Joanne Davis
News Editor

All student organizations wishing to be annually funded came before SGA Sunday during budget allocations. Forty-six organizations put in requests; 41 were allocated funds and five were zero funded. (See chart for total listings on page 4.)

Deliberations, which lasted from 9 a.m. into the early evening, allowed student organizations to appear one last time before the Senate to justify and/or explain why they feel they should be funded. If senators have any questions, they use that time, all the while taking into consideration what the Finance Committee recommended the funding to be.

Some organizations, such as the Accounting Club, the American Indians Resisting Ostracism Club and STAR were zero funded and told they would be better off making individual requests for programming, travel and so on next year. These requests would be decided on an individual basis and the money taken out of special reserves for these types of requests.

During deliberations, a motion was made to zero fund GPU. Cheri Marston, one of the GPU representatives, calmly quoted SGA's own Constitution regarding removing oneself from a vote if any biases were felt. "We're not unjustly asking for money; we're educating the student body, not just the gay people."

GPU was asked questions repeatedly on things such as their concert-funding requests, their telephone, postage requests, and so on. During the many questions, Marston interjected, "I do not see how you, Robin Engel, can include yourself when you have deliberately discriminated yourself in a Letter to the Editor printed in The Pointer.

Robin Engel abstained from voting on GPU's amendments, but did vote against the final $595 GPU finally received. SGA

President Chris Johnson allowed Engel's vote and said, "I would rule that he was expressing his opinion as a student, not as a senator."

As a cost-saving measure, 90FM and The Pointer were granted monies to purchase computer equipment to be shared between the two organizations. The equipment will save The Pointer alone approximately $25,000 annually in type-setting costs. 90FM will utilize it for business operations, daily logs, Trivia and filling the music library.

Complaints filed against local health club Jazz group's travel zero funded

by Linda Butkus
Staff Reporter

Several complaints have been filed against the Dynamic Health Club on Division Street in Stevens Point for allegedly breaking their contracts with its members because they are closing down. "Right now we're basically obtaining complaints from any person that wants to file a complaint. We're reviewing them, and both Madison and our offices are reviewing them to determine what course of action we're going to take," said John Carlson, an investigator with the District Attorney's office.

The northside Dynamic Health Club closed in November 1985 because the furnace went out in the building, according to Rick Riley, a member of the club. "What they did was they said that the furnace went out and that it was going to cost them $10,000 to replace it, which is complete assninity," Riley said. "That's what they used for a scam to close it down," he added.

According to Riley, after two months they finally just said they weren't going to reopen. "As of November they're violating the contract. Anytime they're closed for a one week period, by the contract the person is entitled to an extension on their time. Since they never reopened the money should be returned," Riley said.

"There is a law in Wisconsin called a Fitness Center Law and I guess that's one of the things we're looking at to determine whether there are any potential violations of that law," said Carlson. "We're also coordinating our investigation with the Dept. of Justice, the Office of Consumer Protection in Madison," he said.

Another section of the Fitness Center Law states, "If any facility or service becomes unavailable at any time during the length of the contract, the consumer is entitled to an adjusted refund or to a transfer of the unused portion of the membership to another affiliated salon."

When most people joined they were told that they would have six days to work out at both spas (northside and southside in Plover) three days at each spa, and by closing down one spa you're eliminating three days automatically, said Riley. "The ones that are getting burned the worst as far as I'm concerned are the students because they have no accessibility," he said.

Riley said he talked to the D.A.'s office and they gave him a whole list of state laws that pertain to spas. "One of the laws is if they close the spa down that you can either get an extension to another spa or you can get your money refunded," he said. "Now that is the option of the consumer not the option of the spa. They're trying to make it sound like they're giving you an option to the southside spa and in reality that's not true," Riley added.

As of now the complaints are being reviewed to see what action is warranted. "Anyone interested in filing a complaint can contact our office," said Carlson.

Probably the best thing that could happen is to get the people together at the university and file a petition, Riley said. "The more complaints there are the more pressure that's going to be put on," he said. "The Dynamic Health Club was unavailable for comments at the time that this article was written.

A lengthy discussion arose during the funding hearings for International Club. Senators objected to the number of students the organization wished to take to a national convention, questioning the necessity of it. After considerable debate, it was decided to fund International Club for mileage but not for any other travel expenses.

Mary Benepe, a senator from COPS, said that SGA was not giving enough funding for minority groups. Two minority groups, AIRO (American Indians Resisting Ostracism) and STAR (Students Together Achieving Results) were zero funded for the coming year. International Club, which serves over 200 students as well as the community, was allotted $1,012.

Mid-Americans, UWSP's award winning vocal jazz performance group, suffered a setback Sunday when their travel expense funds were slashed from $1,000 to zero. The group, which usually travels throughout the state performing for high schools, senior citizens, and other groups, may not be able to tour at all next year. Said Director Charles Reichl, "It's very disappointing. A lot of people won't be able to see us perform next year because of the cut. We've always been treated well before, so this came as kind of a shock."

The group's technician, their only paid position, also received a considerable cut in salary of over $200. Total amount allocated to Mid-Americans was $3,275.

Bullis is chosen as Comm. Dept. Chair

University News Service

Roger Bullis, a faculty specialist in television, film, computer communications and popular culture, has been chosen to head the Division of Communication at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

He was recommended for the post by his teaching colleagues in the division and appointed to a three-year term by Paul Palombo, dean of the College of Fine Arts.

Bullis will begin his new duties on July 1, succeeding Myrvin Christopherson who will leave to become president of Dana College in Nebraska.

Roger Bullis

He said Christopherson has been "respected and loved" as an educator on campus and as a leader in the community. It will be difficult to follow his leadership, Bullis said, "but the job will be made easier because we have a faculty that is a hard working group of friends."

The division has about 700 majors and more than 20 full and part-time faculty members. The student enrollment is one of the largest in an undergraduate communication program in the Midwest.

A native of Eau Claire, Bullis grew up there and in Stevens Point, attending UWSP and later receiving his B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from UW-Madison.

He taught at UW-Madison and was a public speaker for a Madison-based utility before joining the UWSP faculty 15 years ago. Besides teaching in his division, he directed a subunit on mass communication studies and helped organize and advise the UWSP Film Society.

He has produced and directed numerous film and TV presentations and has done extensive consulting in the areas of cable television for municipalities and microcomputer use in businesses and schools. He has won awards for several documentary films and has served as president of the Wisconsin Communication Association.

Apathy and SGA: A modest proposal

*A student was once asked why he was so apathetic.
He responded: 'I don't care to answer.'*

Each year about this time, for those of you not afflicted, leaders of most campus organizations prepare their budget proposals for the following year. For organizations who receive funding from Student Government Association, this means appearing before SGA's Finance Committee. The Finance Committee subsequently listens to the organization representative justify their budget proposals and makes their own assessment as to just how much money any given organization needs.

After the Finance Committee makes their recommendation, leaders from student organizations take those recommendations and appear before the roughly 30-member student senate, that unequivocal reflection of the student will. The student senate then votes on the budget proposals which will finally complete metamorphosis into the organization's budget for the next fiscal year.

The final result, not surprisingly, winds up being a mess that few organizations are satisfied with. I would be the first to admit, however, that deciding which organizations should be funded and at what amount is a difficult job. So to alleviate this annual uproar, I can't help but consider a proposal recently made by Dr. Carol Chahey, a University of Michigan journalism professor, in light of the dissatisfaction that the university's student body expressed toward their student government's funding decisions.

Her proposal goes like this: In order to obtain a fair representation of how students want their segregated fees spent (each student at UWSP pays $69.60 in segregated fees) students should be allowed to individually decide which organizations they would like to give their $69.60 to. To facilitate the students' desires, a list of student organizations should be provided to each student as he or she completes the registration process. A student could then check the appropriate box for the organizations he or she would like to see funded and at what amount within each student's $69.60 limit. SGA would still, however, be responsible for recognizing new organizations, and the finer details of such a proposal would need ironing.

Granted, this is a risky proposal. It's risky because the student body would have direct control over their own segregated fees. "It wouldn't be fair to all organizations," some would argue, yet it would be the most accurate representation of the student body's desires anyone could hope to get. I'll admit that the idea of this proposal made me a bit uneasy at first, but the closer the proposal is analyzed, the clearer its merits become.

The Pointer surely has as much to lose as any other student organization if the student body decides to reduce our funding, but that is precisely why I am able to fairly present such a proposal. If the student body wants to cut funding for The Pointer, SGA or any other organization, so be it.

It only seems logical, though, based on past experience, that SGA would be supportive of this proposal. SGA has, after all, long criticized the rampant student apathy on this campus. In fact, they have purchased advertising space in The Pointer saying, "Stay uninformed and uninvolved. Let others make decisions for you," in an attempt to generate more student involvement. Oddly enough, many SGA representatives have this student apathy to thank for their SGA positions, since many qualified students never apply for these SGA positions. But here is SGA's perfect opportunity. I can't think of a better way to get students actively involved on this campus than by giving them the authority to spend their own segregated fees as they see fit.

Think of the student participation it would generate. Students would finally have a vested and direct interest in how student organizations are financed. It doesn't take a prophet to predict that many organizations would be lobbying the student body with earnest intensity to ensure their share of funding. The net result would undoubtedly be — to the delight of SGA — more student involvement and less apathy.

There would be changes. SGA would no longer have to fret over the annual budget process. They would simply have to tally the student surveys taken at registration to determine how much money would go to each organization. Similarly, they wouldn't have to take the heat for budget decisions since those decisions would be made to the student body, not SGA.

The next step, then, is to see if the student body favors such a system. If the students do indeed want such a system, one question remains: Will SGA have the leadership to implement such a proposal?

Commentary

Does SGA's parliamentary procedures include manners?

by Joanne Davis
News Editor

Students and government. Government these days tends to connote negative and apathetic feelings in many students' minds. While the Gramm-Rudman legislation continues to grind students' hopes to a halt on the national level, right here in Stevens Point, Student Government ground on student organizations this weekend during the 1986-87 budget allocations.

Each year organizations wishing to be annually funded must submit a budget, one which follows certain criteria, to SGA for their Finance Committee review. After meeting with the groups and reviewing the budgets, the Finance Committee submits their recommendation of funding to the Senate during official allocations. The Finance Committee is currently composed of a select group of SGA members and only one at-large member (a non-SGA member).

The Senate, composed of some elected students and some not, voted this weekend on those recommendations. Student Government is quick to remind the student body of the importance of their decisions. When they are made with the students in mind, terrific things can happen.

Their actions this weekend, however, seemed to dampen their credibility. Not only did some senators chatter incessantly while organizations tried to plead their cases, they also read comics, browsed through magazines, paid a pizza delivery man, entered and left the room at will, and spoke with members of the audience during voting. Not only were these actions rude, but also intimidating to the spokespersons of the organizations.

The president of SGA on several occasions saw fit to mock students appearing before the Senate. If the students, not knowing about the "parliamentary procedures" asked if the Senate had questions, laughter from the president and some senators resulted. When the president and executive director of SGA came before their own Senate to budget themselves, the president again mocked a student who had asked that her members' salaries not be cut. (Students can draw their own conclusions as to how realistic it is to have SGA allocate themselves money and answer only to themselves.)

How can carefully thought-out decisions be made with the constant upheaval occurring: Can't common courtesy be expected for those who are placed in an obvious position of submission in front of a group who claims to be "the only governing board" the students can appeal to? I understand the proceedings are long and tiresome, but common courtesy costs little and offends no one.

The decisions reached under these conditions are debatable.

Most people, including myself, are not experts on these matters. It became clear, however, if you were a senator who sat on the Finance Committee, you had an immediate corner on the market in the use of "call the question." Call the question is a statement used, it seems, to bring a premature end to a debate. In other words, student organizations appearing before SGA can say no more to change senators' minds, and other senators must be quick to say "objection" and then come up with a reason why they object.

Since the Senate body has had roughly a 75 percent turnover in members this year, lack of experience and nerve may have played a part in objecting to this obviously shrewd and powerful committee. On several occasions, the Senate seemed confused by figures supplied by the Finance Committee; some senators said they didn't have an adequate breakdown for all parts of an organization's bud-et and some senators expressed frustration with the lack of justification for cuts in certain areas.

Admittedly, not all senators nor organization can walk away from the allocations satisfied, but the time has come to take a look at how and who makes these important decisions. Why was GPU grilled for nearly 10 minutes on bringing a well-known singer to UWSP? Yet, SAF walked away with $300 to fund performers for a going-away party. I am not impugn-ing either request—I merely question the motives for the Senate's questions, the subtleties, and not so subtleties that occurred when it came to minority groups such as AIRO (American Indians Resisting Ostracism), Gay People's Union and the International Club.

Discriminatory feelings and arbitrary decisions are not what organizations at this university

Candidates Forum

Fact: Only 8% of UWSP students voted in last year's SGA elections. The nation's college voting average is 6%.

Lisa Thiel and Steve Geiss

If we were elected to represent the UWSP student body, we hope not only to make the voices of the students heard, but also to coordinate with the student-elected Senate to activate students to become informed on issues, take stands, and become active in voting and voicing their opinions before it's too late. We feel that the positions of president and vice-president of SGA would allow us to have the means and right to attempt this goal as well as others we have. It will also allow us to use our leadership experience and voice our vast knowledge of student concerns to those who can make a difference in your favor.

The UWSP Student Government Association is a unique organization in that it involves students in decisions that other university students have no say in. It is involved in many facets of student life, your life. Senators from each of the four colleges convene weekly to share and discuss the activities, plans and proposals affecting the student body. From this debate, the Senate makes decisions and establishes policies in the interest of the UWSP students. Student Government is supposed to be the voice of the student body, not that of a select few who are a part of the organization. We understand this and don't advocate rule by a few.

Michael Ormond and Diane Barton

On Tuesday, March 18, UWSP students will be asked to vote for Student Government President, Vice-President and Senators to represent them in Student Government for the 86-87 academic year. We are asking you to vote on that day because of the significance your vote will have on the future of UWSP students.

We, Michael Ormond and Diane Barton, have chosen to seek the office of President and Vice-President of Student Government Association because of the genuine interest we have in serving students and more specifically UWSP students. We also believe we are the most qualified candidates.

Why? With our participation in organizations such as the Association for Community Tasks (ACT), Computer Science Association (CSA), Campus Leaders Association (CLA), and our mutual participation in student senate, we feel we have a well rounded background in organizations, activities, and also understand the importance of such student involvement. We, if elected, wish to stress the importance of such student involvement during our administration. We also feel it is important to note our experience in regard to working with budgets. We each have not only been involved with budgets through senate

SGA allocates themselves $33,713 during budgets

by Theresa Boehlein
Staff Reporter

During the recent controversial Student Government Association budget deliberations held Sunday, March 9, Chris Johnson, SGA president, and Bonnie Helbach, executive director, came before Student Senate requesting monies for the organization.

In Chris Johnson's address to the Senate, he stated, "We realize you've (Senate) had to make cuts in student organization budgets. However, we were satisfied with what Finance Committee recommended for SGA."

SGA's initial request for the 1986-87 school year was $38,876.

This request is up 7.5 percent from last year's budget allocation.

After the Finance Committee's recommendation took a cut in supplies, SGA's final budget allocation totals $33,713.

Four areas which were cut included $3,605 for salaries; $1,520 for 38 representatives to attend a weekend leadership workshop; $40 for supplies; and $253 for catering of recognition parties which included such items as punch, taco chips with salsa sauce and cheese trays.

Every student organization, with the exception of SGA, is required to produce some sort of revenue to justify budget requests. Revenue may include anything from popcorn and t-shirts to baked goods and jewelry sales.

"The issue of revenue for SGA has been addressed frequently by Senate," Bonnie Helbach stated. "It's a valid statement. However, senators are volunteers and it's hard to ask them to put in the hours for their positions and then go out and sell candy bars," she added.

One expense from the SGA budget was advertisements in The Pointer which included four SGA election ads ($392), two ads for promotional purposes ($100), five ads for SGA workshops including Who's Who, Annual Budgets and Women's Affairs ($327), and three miscellaneous ads ($198).

SGA budgeted Pointer ads at full off-campus rates instead of the normal 15 percent discount. The Pointer provides campus organizations. The difference between SGA's allocation of $1,017 and the actual price they would have to pay with the 15 percent discount ($690) would be a savings of $327 in student funds.

Concentration

Another expense involves stress management, and financial responsibility.

computer-generated labels for three student body mailings at $90 per mailing. When Helbach initially completed the SGA budget request, she stated, "I was given an estimate from Records and Registration at a penny a label. In a later conversation, the same person, Larry Sipiorski, from Records and Registration stated that certain accounts are a half-cent per label." SGA's labeling would be considered under this fee, which would mean a savings of $135 from the $270 allocation made by Student Senate.

Across the board, the majority of student organization salaries were cut to establish uniformity between the various organizations.

Salaries were re-evaluated based on job descriptions, skills involved, campus awareness,

"It's sad to say, but people really just aren't interested. They don't care where the money goes."

— Scott Klein
SGA Budget Director

by Carol Diser
Staff Reporter

According to SGA's own standards, students have not been equally represented this year on both the Finance Committee and the Student Senate itself.

According to Budget Director Scott Klein, the Finance Committee should be composed of the following: the Budget Director, the Budget Examiner, the Budget Controller, SGA's Vice President, four Senators (one from each college), and four at-large members (also one from each college).

This year the Finance Committee consisted of the four executive board members, three senators from the College of Letters and Sciences, one senator each from College of Natural Resources and College of Fine Arts, and one student at large from the College of Letters and Sciences.

That arrangement leaves the College of Professional Studies

completely unrepresented. It also has CNR and Fine Arts missing a representative each. College of Letters and Sciences obviously became the political clout because of its larger number of senators.

Klein claimed that the at-large students needed to balance the committee could not be found. Although ads were not placed in the Pointer and the Daily, Klein said that he and other SGA staff approached

people they thought might be interested such as organization treasurers and other active people even though they might not be as unbiased as the average student. "It's sad to say," said Klein, "but people really just aren't interested. They don't care where the money goes."

On the SGA Senate, colleges were also under-represented mainly due to the resignation or graduation of former senators. Some positions were not filled until the past month.

The College of Professional Studies was the most seriously

under-represented with two out of five senate positions left unfilled until three weeks ago.

The current senate proportions are five senators for COPS, four for Fine Arts, 15 for Letters and Sciences, and six for CNR. A new resolution for reapportionment would increase COPS by one and CNR by one. The number of senators each college should have is figured from the percentage of students in each college with undeclared students assigned to the college that campus predictions say they will eventually arrive at.

How to control stress factors

by Karen Hettich
Staff Reporter

Everyone is subject to various amounts of stress at various times in their life. Stress can be good or bad, stemming from personal or job-related sources. All stress produces chemical and physiological changes which put your body in a fight or flight response readiness as it prepares for a sudden emergency or change.

Chronic stress has been linked to several physical disorders including: depression, headaches, addictions of all sorts, hypertension, allergies, reduced sexual drive, poor concentration and cardiac disorders, to name a few.

The control of stress is within your capability, but it is also possible to prevent stress. Prevention means taking control of your life, putting the responsibility for your health on you.

High levels of stress may lead to what is commonly called burnout. You know the feeling, lethargy—can't get out of bed in the morning, can't seem to get your head together for the important test.

The number one result of burnout is lack of personal and career goals. If you lose sight of your goals for a semester, you are more apt to put stress on yourself and become subject to burnout.

There are ways to prevent stress and burnout. First on the list is to stop procrastination.

Begin to get yourself organized, begin pacing yourself, in an established routine.

Perhaps you might start with a stress log, similar to a time log. It will help you identify special events and their relationship to stress in your life. Watch for symptoms, whether physical or psychological. Your body or mind tries to tell you when something is out of sync. Getting sick may be a signal that you may have to do something different about your stress. Being ill is one way your body can deal with stress effects.

Try to avoid excessive change. Plan for change and transitions. For instance, you know when finals are coming. Cont. p. 27

Futurist speaks at Point

by Jacquie Riggie

David Zach of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. spoke on the future at a program sponsored by Career Planning and Student Development. The talk, "Future in the World of Work," was held Monday at the UC Program Banquet Room.

Zach addressed the upcoming widespread use of robots by the year 2000. "There are factories in Japan where there are no parking lots," he stated. "Robots don't drive to work. They don't take breaks. They don't do sloppy work and don't talk back," Zach added.

Zach said that the increasing use of automation did not necessarily mean there would be an increase in employment. This will be due to a decrease in the availability of jobs.

What these new service and informational jobs will be is difficult to say, Zach said. "When it comes right down to it," he stated, "nobody can tell what the jobs of the future are going to be. You see a lot of forecasts that say these are going to be the jobs of the future, this is what to train for. Sometimes they can be right but, more often than not, they are going to be off the mark because you

SGA allocates themselves $33,713 during budgets

by Theresa Boehlein
Staff Reporter

During the recent controversial Student Government Association budget deliberations held Sunday, March 9, Chris Johnson, SGA president, and Bonnie Helbach, executive director, came before Student Senate requesting monies for the organization.

In Chris Johnson's address to the Senate, he stated, "We realize you've (Senate) had to make cuts in student organization budgets. However, we were satisfied with what Finance Committee recommended for SGA."

SGA's initial request for the 1986-87 school year was $38,876.

This request is up 7.5 percent from last year's budget allocation.

After the Finance Committee's recommendation took a cut in supplies, SGA's final budget allocation totals $33,713.

Four areas which were cut included $3,605 for salaries; $1,520 for 38 representatives to attend a weekend leadership workshop; $40 for supplies; and $253 for catering of recognition parties which included such items as punch, taco chips with salsa sauce and cheese trays.

Every student organization, with the exception of SGA, is required to produce some sort of revenue to justify budget requests. Revenue may include anything from popcorn and t-shirts to baked goods and jewelry sales.

"The issue of revenue for SGA has been addressed frequently by Senate," Bonnie Helbach stated. "It's a valid statement. However, senators are volunteers and it's hard to ask them to put in the hours for their positions and then go out and sell candy bars," she added.

One expense from the SGA budget was advertisements in The Pointer which included four SGA election ads ($392), two ads for promotional purposes ($100), five ads for SGA workshops including Who's Who, Annual Budgets and Women's Affairs ($327), and three miscellaneous ads ($198).

SGA budgeted Pointer ads at full off-campus rates instead of the normal 15 percent discount. The Pointer provides campus organizations. The difference between SGA's allocation of $1,017 and the actual price they would have to pay with the 15 percent discount ($690) would be a savings of $327 in student funds.

Concentration

Some senators found comical relief during Sunday's budget deliberations.

Another expense involves stress management, and financial responsibility.

Another expense involves computer-generated labels for three student body mailings at $90 per mailing. When Helbach initially completed the SGA budget request, she stated, "I was given an estimate from Records and Registration at a penny a label. In a later conversation, the same person, Larry Sipiorski, from Records and Registration stated that certain accounts are a half-cent per label." SGA's labeling would be considered under this fee, which would mean a savings of $135 from the $270 allocation made by Student Senate.

Across the board, the majority of student organization salaries were cut to establish uniformity between the various organizations.

Salaries were re-evaluated based on job descriptions, skills involved, campus awareness,

"It's sad to say, but people really just aren't interested. They don't care where the money goes."

— Scott Klein
SGA Budget Director

by Carol Diser
Staff Reporter

According to SGA's own standards, students have not been equally represented this year on both the Finance Committee and the Student Senate itself.

According to Budget Director Scott Klein, the Finance Committee should be composed of the following: the Budget Director, the Budget Examiner, the Budget Controller, SGA's Vice President, four Senators (one from each college), and four at-large members (also one from each college).

This year the Finance Committee consisted of the four executive board members, three senators from the College of Letters and Sciences, one senator each from College of Natural Resources and College of Fine Arts, and one student at large from the College of Letters and Sciences.

That arrangement leaves the College of Professional Studies

completely unrepresented. It also has CNR and Fine Arts missing a representative each. College of Letters and Sciences obviously became the political clout because of its larger number of senators.

Klein claimed that the at-large students needed to balance the committee could not be found. Although ads were not placed in the Pointer and the Daily, Klein said that he and other SGA staff approached

people they thought might be interested such as organization treasurers and other active people even though they might not be as unbiased as the average student. "It's sad to say," said Klein, "but people really just aren't interested. They don't care where the money goes."

On the SGA Senate, colleges were also under-represented mainly due to the resignation or graduation of former senators. Some positions were not filled until the past month.

The College of Professional Studies was the most seriously

under-represented with two out of five senate positions left unfilled until three weeks ago.

The current senate proportions are five senators for COPS, four for Fine Arts, 15 for Letters and Sciences, and six for CNR. A new resolution for reapportionment would increase COPS by one and CNR by one. The number of senators each college should have is figured from the percentage of students in each college with undeclared students assigned to the college that campus predictions say they will eventually arrive at.

How to control stress factors

by Karen Hettich
Staff Reporter

Everyone is subject to various amounts of stress at various times in their life. Stress can be good or bad, stemming from personal or job-related sources. All stress produces chemical and physiological changes which put your body in a fight or flight response readiness as it prepares for a sudden emergency or change.

Chronic stress has been linked to several physical disorders including: depression, headaches, addictions of all sorts, hypertension, allergies, reduced sexual drive, poor concentration and cardiac disorders, to name a few.

The control of stress is within your capability, but it is also possible to prevent stress. Prevention means taking control of your life, putting the responsibility for your health on you.

High levels of stress may lead to what is commonly called burnout. You know the feeling, lethargy—can't get out of bed in the morning, can't seem to get your head together for the important test.

The number one result of burnout is lack of personal and career goals. If you lose sight of your goals for a semester, you are more apt to put stress on yourself and become subject to burnout.

There are ways to prevent stress and burnout. First on the list is to stop procrastination.

Begin to get yourself organized, begin pacing yourself, in an established routine.

Perhaps you might start with a stress log, similar to a time log. It will help you identify special events and their relationship to stress in your life. Watch for symptoms, whether physical or psychological. Your body or mind tries to tell you when something is out of sync. Getting sick may be a signal that you may have to do something different about your stress. Being ill is one way your body can deal with stress effects.

Try to avoid excessive change. Plan for change and transitions. For instance, you know when finals are coming,

Futurist speaks at Point

by Jacquie Riggall
Staff Reporter

David Zach of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. spoke on the future at a program sponsored by Career Planning and Student Development. The talk, "Future in the World of Work," was held Monday at the UC Program Banquet Room.

Zach addressed the upcoming widespread use of robots by the year 2000. "There are factories in Japan where there are no parking lots," he stated. "Robots don't drive to work. They don't take breaks. They don't do sloppy work and don't talk back," Zach added.

Zach said that the increasing use of automation did not necessarily mean there would be an increase in employment. This will be due to a decrease in the availability of jobs.

What these new service and informational jobs will be is difficult to say, Zach said. "When it comes right down to it," he stated, "nobody can tell what the jobs of the future are going to be. You see a lot of forecasts that say these are going to be

Educate heterosexuals, too

To The Editor:

Yes, Mr. Engel, the parents (and Students) of Stevens Point should be informed of "Lesbian and Gay Awareness Week." Why should they remain uninformed and ignorant about what it means to be a homosexual when they have a chance to attend one of GPU's programs on it? Have you ever attended one of these programs? You should. Then you could see for yourself that gay people are "normal."

Parents who are aware and educated on what "gay" really means will not be so shocked when their son/daughter tells them that he/she is. Parents will see that gay people don't conduct themselves any differently on a day-to-day basis than do straight people. They don't eat or drink special foods, aren't employed in any particular field, and don't go around overtly displaying their sexuality. "Straight" people, however, do this all the time.

I am assuming, Mr. Engel, that you one day plan to marry and raise a family. Now, just suppose one of your children comes up to you and tells you that he/she is gay. Are you going to shun him/her as an outcast of society? Will you persecute your child as a "sinner"? How could someone "normal" produce a less than "normal" child?

You and other people who are passing judgment against homosexual and homosexuality are some day going to be parents. Some of you, the parents of gay children. The things you do today are only going to be hurting your future gay children. My advice to you, Mr. Engel, is to become "educated"!

Louise Congdon

Understanding not persecution

To The Editor:

Rejoice, UWSP students, the almighty has taken form right here in Stevens Point, or is it the second coming of Hitler? This "man" will make it right, he will cleanse our ranks of those immoral infidels who dare to trod paths other than that of the righteous right wing path to glory. Yes, Robin Engel is my shepherd, I shall not want (to think any other way).

How did I become thus enlightened? Well, by the Apostle Engel's letter to The Pointer last week proposing that we support him in banning the GPU. He has appointed himself the leader of the "normal people," in other words, the leader of a societally subjective, completely nebulous concept. Did you know that you, as a UWSP student, are humiliated, ashamed, misrepresented, heartbroken and have a bad reputation? Mr. Engel has taken the liberty of transforming "I" into "we" and is including all of us in his righteous assertions.

I am heterosexual, and I am a student of this university. But that does not mean that I subscribe to the views of a fascist right wing pigeon who elevates himself to the role of champion of "our" interests and reputation. Mr. Engel wishes to enlist your aid in his campaign to "eliminate this filth." Well, hot damn, you get the tar, I'll get the feathers. And while we're on our Falwellian march to sanctify the campus, we'll "eliminate" other forms of dissent. We wouldn't want anything like open-mindedness, humanism, and the free exchange of ideas to blacken the white, right flag.

I'm sure Mr. Engel's sexuality comes dry cleaned. Or is there some sort of reaction formation that underlies your vindictive nature on this topic, Robin? In any case, I will attempt to comprehend and communicate, not apprehend and eliminate. Jesus Christ never reserved the right to persecute. Who does that make you?

When you say "we," don't include me.
Bob Peterson

At least 10% of population is homosexual

To The Editor:

This is in response to Mr. Engel's letter which appeared in the March 6 issue of the Pointer.

To begin, statistics have shown that at least one out of every 10 people is either lesbian or gay. Therefore, it is likely that approximately 900 students on this campus fit the category which you believe is misrepresented, not to mention the 250 plus people who attended the gay/lesbian awareness programs.

You, Mr. Engel, are the unfortunate one because you let others, whom you don't even know, determine the way you feel about this university and community, whereas the GPU represents only its members and is the only organization to speak for gay people.

If you had taken the time to attend any of the many programs which were offered during Lesbian/Gay Awareness Week, you would have discovered that there were no overt displays of sexual "antics," but rather lectures and seminars which pertain to both the heterosexual and homosexual people of this community.

Kelli Frankenburg
Co-President
Gay People's Union

Right to express themselves

To The Editor:

In response to Robin Engel's letter to the editor on a public ban of the Gay Peoples Union: Robin, as fellow College Republicans, we must realize the great right our forefathers left us, that of freedom of speech and expression.

As much as we disagree with their beliefs, I, in contrast to you must support their right to express themselves. Whether the beliefs of the Gay Peoples Union are right or wrong is irrelevant, instead we must as Americans support their right to voice these beliefs.

Also Heterosexually Yours,
Jeffrey William Burkard

Naive and close-minded

To The Editor:

I am writing in response to the Letter To The Editor in the March 6 Pointer, which suggested a ban of the Gay People's Union sign. This, in my mind, is a very naive and close-minded suggestion.

First, I would like to point out I am a heterosexual, and in no way support or condemn the GPU. But I do realize there are more people out there than white, heterosexual Christians.

A college campus should be a place in which one learns not only more about himself, but others as well. Students must understand that people have different ideas, values and beliefs than their own, and all ideas must be heard. When we experience other views, we not only reinforce our beliefs, but we open our minds to the beliefs of others.

We're not only here for a classroom education, but also to expand our thoughts and understand the world around us. We must learn to realize gays and people opposed to our beliefs live in this world, too, and if we respect the thoughts and attitudes of those people, the world will be a much more peaceful place to live.

So I suggest the author of that letter, who would have most definitely opposed Martin Luther King's movement in the '60s, get off his high horse and stop professing that which is right and wrong. Leave the judgment of the just and unjust up to God!

Scott Pompe

Bible in the wrong hands

To The Editor:

This is in response to the Bible quotations condemning homosexuality that have been brought up by self-righteous people during the past Lesbian/Gay Awareness Week.

It is truly sad when people use the verses in the Bible for their own means. Anyone can take things out of context to suit their own whims.

For example:

I Timothy 2:12: "I do not permit a woman to act as a teacher, or in any way to have authority over a man; she must be quiet."

Why don't these Bible-thumping Christians parade the halls of the COPS Building and convince women education majors to change their sinful ways, like they do to members of the Gay People's Union?

Exodus 21:17: "Whoever curses his father or mother shall be put to death."

How many students would be on this campus if that were practiced?

This list of quotations can go on and on. My point is not to ridicule the Bible, but this clearly shows how dangerous the Bible's verses can be when placed in the wrong hands. To use the Bible as a six-shooter against people who are gay or lesbian, or of some other viewpoint, only cheapens its value as a book of spiritual inspiration.

Jesus Christ had nothing to say about homosexuality in the Gospels. His predominant message was one of love and the helping of others.

Let's stop all this bickering and condemning and leave the judgment up to God. Let's practice the greatest commandment: Love one another.

Terri Rauscher

GPU funding controversy

To The Editor:

Now is the time when one sees the conclusion of the annual budget hearings, but the beginning of the problem was how to allocate segregated fees appropriately. One solution suggested by those in search of an easy answer is to not fund groups not supported by the majority. Specifically, some people are most adamant in their non-support of the Gay Peoples Union. The point to be made at this time is that $69.60 of each and every student's tuition (supporters and non-supporters of GPU alike) go towards the funding of every organization on campus. The decision as to which group gets what money was determined by the student senators last Sunday.

To the senators and students: the GPU serves and is supported by more than enough students on this campus and community. During the 7th Annual Gay And Lesbian Awareness Week alone, over 250 people attended the various programming events. This is surely significant enough to justify funding and the continuing existence of the Gay Peoples Union. The $596 that SGA did allocate GPU is only one percent of the total amount of money available. Is this too much to ask for unique programming that is provided for everyone and very important to a substantial group of students?

Discrimination in the residence halls

To The Editor:

Discrimination struck hard Sunday evening at the Pray/Sims Hall Council meeting. The issue? Why it was necessary to retain the quiet floor of Sims? The minority? The women of 4th floor who prefer to study in the privacy of their rooms.

The council listened to the opinions voiced, which were grossly misrepresented, and then allowed the wing representatives to vote. They promptly did away with the study floor and gave the conscientious studying minority two choices: forfeit the right to study in a quiet atmosphere or move elsewhere. Plans, obviously premeditated, to move these women to a different hall connotated a quarantine. (Apparently hall council is afraid that these study habits are contagious.) Their "thoughtful" consideration for an atmosphere where the women wouldn't be bothered (don't you mean where they won't be a bother?) was not much appreciated.

What is all the bother about? The issue has gone beyond allowing 4 Sims to have quiet hours from 8 p.m. to 9 a.m. on weekdays. It emphasizes the principle which underlies higher education. Consider the following:

- 1) The right to study ought to take precedence over the right to socialize, especially since we pay for two years of mandatory on-campus housing.
- 2) Granted, socializing is important to the development of the individual. However, to socialize without consideration for others (who are affected by one's actions) is not only immature, but also defeats the concepts of cooperation and mutual respect, upon which community living and the adult world are based.

- 3) Contrary to popular vote, long corridors typical of residence halls were not designed for bourbon streets, bowling alleys, stereo battlezones or echo chambers.

- 4) Finally, this issue is not really whether a quiet floor is needed. It is a popularity contest between residence halls with the campaign method emphasizing social activities and parties to attract new residents. Perhaps if these activities were curtailed, it would not be necessary to compensate for the quick turnover of residents (i.e. dropouts and academic suspensions).

To this campus, and to Pray/Sims in particular, the quest for academic superiority has apparently been lost amongst nicotine fits, beer bong attacks and overactive hormones. Further, popularity has become twisted into a conglomeration of parties and good times. UWSP, as a state institution of higher education, has evolved into a center of 'higher living and little awareness of academe. Then again, what the hell? Nobody really cares.

To The Editor:

Is this a typical college student's story? Five years ago, I began my college education with an art education major. While working with a young art teacher for a field experience course, I was talked out of the art education field. I then changed to a communications major, with an art minor. I changed to the communications major because I was told I would be good in radio by a few people in my public speaking course. Being an impressionable lad of sophomore standing, I said, "Great! Comm. major for me! My future is solved!" and thought little about it afterwards.

Last year I completed fulfilling the requirements for my comm. major. I then asked myself "O.K. What do I want to do with this major — what can I do with this major?" I realized that I had lost any remote desire to go into radio or TV. I never had any desire to go into public relations, advertising, or sales. I also realized I had hardly learned a damn thing! Is it possible for a student to complete the requirements for a major with a 'B' average and not learn anything? I guess so. After I became aware of all of this, I was still left with the question: "What to do with the comm. major?" I had never lost a desire/curiosity for teaching, so why not get certified for my comm major and art minor — Right?

That's what I decided. I was accepted into the College of Professional Studies and have been picking up the education courses required for teacher certification this current school year. Further complications have surfaced, however. I wasn't thrilled with my comm. methods course and have since lost any desire to teach communications. I also have discovered that I have fallen victim to what might be called 'student burnout'. Over the years, my study habits haven't improved, they've become worse. I already have assignments that were due two weeks ago. I've lost all motivation. This past Sunday I played darts and drank beer from 2 p.m. to 1 a.m. Is this sort of burnout common? Maybe I'm just a borderline alcoholic — I know that's common to a lot of students.

I'm still left with the question of my future. After looking at the education option again, I still think I would enjoy teaching. I'd rather teach art in the lab-type environment versus the more structured environment of communications, though.

So, here I am looking at the same major I started out with years ago. Am I lost in some sort of topsy-turvy academic circle? To complete an Art Ed. major, I would have to take courses this summer and fall and student teach in the spring of '87. Do I want to struggle through school with next to zero for another year? I think not.

Is this a common tale? Are there other students out there like me?

Saint Patty before the Hebrew and the fame

by R. Lionel Krupnow
Features Editor

I knew Saint Patty before that Hebrew ever met him and decided to reward him for ridding Ireland of snakes. Ay, rid Ireland of the snakes, he did. But I know the real tale behind the hero and if you want to have a true understanding of Saint Patty's Day, then pull up a chair.

It all started about 10 years before that Hebrew came along, like I was saying. Patty was sitting under a climbing plant (of the Genus Humulus) when this cone-shaped catkins fell on his head. Well, he jumps up, he does, and bellows out: "Hop." He grabbed the cone and was about to throw it away when a huge gust of wind blew some barley across the field right into his mouth. Spittin' and sputterin', he tried to wipe the barley out and ended up getting that catkins in his mouth.

He stopped cold, his face all wrinkled up, like he was thinking. I thought the catkins might o' been poisonous. Mother o' God, I thought he'd died, frozen like a pillar o' salt. But then he smiled. Chuckled. His face lit up like he'd seen the Maker Himself. "Stout," he muttered. Just that, "stout."

That's when it all started, really. He became obsessed. We'd spent hours in the woods trying to formulate the perfect combination of barley and hops, to create the perfect stout. And we finally did. Patty Beer, he called it. I didn't mind that I wasn't given recognition for my contribution; after all, he is the one who got the revelation.

It was three years after that the snakes invaded Ireland. I never really saw them, mind ya. But Patty did and that's all it took to convince the nation that something was going on. Soon after Patty gave his speech on the square, in Dublin, there were a whole slew of sightings. Snakes were everywhere.

A lot of the women were seeing 'em, too. The largest sighting came after we had had an especially long town meeting. We drank nearly all the Patty Beer that could be found in the town. The vision hit Patty first.

"Snakes!" he screamed and scurried up a tree. 'Course I never saw them, mind you. But Patty did, and that was enough jumping on the nearest tree.

Well, we survived that first

Poor Patty didn't know what to do. The more snakes he saw, slimy (twits); and the more he drank, the more snakes he saw.

It was a frightening problem, mind you. Indeed, Mary, Joseph and Jesus had plagued the Motherland with this problem. I tried to counsel with Patty. We did our best. But when the Patty Beer had all been drunk, we stopped thinking and slept. Or I slept.

I guess Patty must o' been communing with God the whole time 'cause it wasn't long before he had come up with a solution to the snake problem. I guess I should say that it was God that came up with the solution and sort of showed Patty what to do.

For some odd reason, we had an unusual dry spell. All the hops rotted on the vine; the barley wouldn't grow. Patty was mighty mad, I tell ya. Didn't seem to bother him much at all when we first ran outta beer. But a couple of weeks into the beer drought, he got real mad.

He started sweating and moaning. Then he started screaming about the snakes.

"They're everywhere!" he screamed. "Under the table, on the windowsill." I didn't see them, mind you, but Patty did and... anyway, I started running around the house, hitting the walls and table with a broom, in every spot he said he saw a snake, until I had driven them out. But he didn't stop being mad for a long time. Guess he didn't like the way that God decided to handle the snake problem. He gave up on being mad, however. I mean, how long can you stay mad at God?

Well, when his anger subsided, the snakes left Ireland just after that.

Ay, Patty was a brave lad, indeed. He left us not long after the snakes did. He had drunk a

Dance Theatre presents "Fantasy for a Few Good Men"

by Mary Ringstad
Staff Reporter

As a fifth-year senior in the College of Fine Arts, I have always been amazed by the number of UWSP students who say they are actually "afraid" to enter the Fine Arts Building to take a class, let alone attend something as intangible as a dance concert. I would now like to take the opportunity to dispel those fears by giving you a sneak preview of what you can expect to see this week at DANCE THEATRE.

Most importantly, DANCE THEATRE is not a bunch of people aimlessly jumping around in tutus; in fact, you will not find a tutu anywhere onstage. Each of the choreographers' pieces has a specific message — sometimes it's an aesthetic appeal, often a philosophical or societal comment and, at times, it's just for entertainment. These messages are not difficult to comprehend and that is why dance is a universal art form.

Several of the selections in DANCE THEATRE comment on life and society. Karen Studd's "Life is Like..." is an ensemble, theatrical piece which combined humor, tension and earnest contemplation in an attempt to finish this simile. Often through the use of individual selective perception, the audience receives a reflection of everyday interpersonal situations.

The fear of a nation at war is examined in "Once Upon A Time." Choreographer Linda Caldwell combines modern dance with Jerry Harrison's "Five Minutes" as accompaniment. The music is based on President Reagan's "joking" announcement of how the USA will begin bombing Russia in five minutes.

Three of the pieces look at sex roles in our society. Susan Gingrasso's "Shrimp Cok Tale" gets its text from a list of ingredients on a carton of shrimp dip. The piece, with the flash of a colorful, national commercial, seeks to capture "how the female body is used to sell just about anything." Studd's "Victorian Aftermath" is a modern piece employing humor and sarcasm to reflect upon the conflict of changing sex values and roles in our society.

The third such piece, Caldwell's "Fantasy for a Few Good Men" is aptly named. This impressive work was chosen last month for the honorary closing spot in the Gala performance at the regional American College Dance Festival in Iowa.

"Meshing" by Studd is a perfect example of a piece providing aesthetic appeal. The duet between Studd and senior Michael Bickel expresses the beauty of the fluidity of two interlocking beings as they balance and support one another.

There are purely fun works, too. Caldwell's "Presenting the 'Love Clouds'" takes us back to the 1960s. James Moore's amusing approach to restaging Gene Kelley's famous "Singin' in the Rain" solo dance for senior John Millard guarantees smiles if not laughs.

These pieces and several more comprise the bill of fare at DANCE THEATRE which is being staged now through Sunday, March 16 at Jenkins Theatre (COFA). Performances are at 8 p.m.; Sunday's matinee is at 2 p.m. For only $2, take the plunge and enjoy an evening of beauty, challenge and entertainment. Tickets are still available at the Theatre Box Office. Call 346-4100 for more information.

Mysterious Tales of UWSP

It's only a word

by Brian McCombie
Staff Reporter

My girl-friend is very unappreciative. I continually try to improve her vocabulary and thereby increase her knowledge of the world. But she thinks that I'm insulting her.

Once, I inadvertently called her a strumpet. It's not my fault that I've read Shakespeare. Everyone told me that he was the greatest writer. They didn't tell me that he was also the most vulgar writer in English literature. So strumpet slips out, she runs for the dictionary, yells out a Yaqui war cry and — pow — dictionary in the ribs. But she learned a new word.

She still hates me for calling her my "little marsupial." At first she thought it was some French thing — kind of romantic sounding. Then she remembered "strumpet" and asked what the hell a marsupial was. Was it good? Was it bad?

"Bad?" I asked. "Only if you think a cute little opossum is bad."

The way she was hitting me, I couldn't even explain that the marsupial family included kangaroos and koala bears. What's

Mr. Information has answers

by Brian McCombie
Staff Reporter

You've seen him before. Mr. Information is the tall man with silver hair. He's the grandfather who used to give you caramels when Mom wasn't looking. On warm, spring days he sits on those concrete steps that face the back of the LRC. Right now, though, it's winter, so Mr. Information is sitting in the UC lounge.

All the kids like him, but Jimmy especially. Jimmy's the stocky kid with the blue windbreaker and a Brewer's baseball cap. There's always a mischievous grin between his pudgy cheeks.

Today's conversation sounds like this:

"Tell me about the library, Mr. Information."

"Do you mean the LRC, Jimmy?"

"Oops, Mr. Information, I did it again. I always get those two confused."

"What do you want to know, Jimmy?"

"Well, how come it's so hot in there all the time? They even had a fan in the Reference Room. Isn't it winter?"

"That's because they spent millions of dollars remodeling the LRC, Jimmy."

"But... that doesn't make any sense."

"Well, son, it's hard to understand these things sometimes. It's so hot in the LRC because they're concerned with your health, Jimmy. That's why they spent all that money."

"But..."

"It's true, Jimmy. Last week, you told me you slipped on the ice by Collins, right?"

"You bet, Mr. Information. It was like an ice rink over there for the longest time."

"But you've never slipped on any ice in the library, have you?"

"No, Mr. Information."

"Well, Jimmy, what do you make of that?"

Jimmy's quiet for a second, trying to put it all together.

"You mean, Mr. Information, that they keep it like an oven in there so that there won't be any ice for us to slip on?"

"Very good, Jimmy."

"I guess they really do care about us."

"They do, Jimmy. No matter what, the students always come first."

"Is that why they want to spend all that money on a new swimming pool, Mr. Information?"

"Exactly, Jimmy. Now, some sports think that we don't need a new swimming pool. Know what they want done with the money? They want to spend it on more teachers."

"Well..."

"You're a student, Jimmy. What would you like? More teachers or a swimming pool?"

"Gee, Mr. Information, I think I'd like a swimming pool."

"Of course you would, my boy."

"Is that why they're thinking about cutting the enrollment, Mr. Information?"

"What's that, Jimmy?"

"Didn't you hear about it, Mr. Information? They're thinking about cutting the enrollment to save money."

"Oh yes. Now I remember. But not only will it save the school money and, of course, reduce your tuition, but since there will be fewer students, your teachers will be able to give you more attention. How's that sound, Jimmy?"

"But couldn't they take the money for the swimming pool and..."

"Now, now, Jimmy. You said you wanted the swimming pool,

They forgot that prejudice doesn't mean justice

by R. Lionel Krupnow
Features Editor

Who are these people? Where do they come from? Why do they keep showing up in the Student Senate?

They are a strange breed, no doubt.

It should be understood from the outset that I am not talking about the whole of the Student Senate. Rather I am directing my remarks toward two or three senators who seem incapable of separating themselves from their own narrow-minded views and thus upholding SGA's Constitution. I'm referring specifically to the budget hearings that took place this weekend, and the cuts that were made to GPU's budget.

The Gay People's Union suffered an unwarranted display of hypocrisy and bias that no student organization should be asked to endure. Granted, as I was told by a member of SGA, the Finance Committee decides how much money should be allotted to the various organizations based on size and the money available.

I had some difficulty with his explanation, since I know student organizations that are smaller than GPU and one, specifically, that received nearly seven times the money.

But that aside, the cuts suggested by the Finance Committee do not excuse the conduct of the two or three senators I am referring to. They motioned to zero budget GPU. They gave no justification for their motion, but given the fact that they have publicly renounced homosexuality, it doesn't take much to figure out why they motioned for zero funding. They acted out of their own religious and personal biases.

Now that might not seem like a problem for some. But it states clearly in SGA's Constitution that a student organization cannot be denied funding, or other rights, when on the basis of their sexual preference. Those senators did not act out of concern for GPU's well-being, nor for the benefit of the campus as a whole.

The senators would rather see animosity continue between gay students and "straight" (I'm not sure what that term means) students, while GPU is concerned with increasing the understanding about gay people, wiping out the myths and striving for harmony. If the senators are concerned about the same things, why did they act to the contrary?

Personally, I have had my fill of verse-slinging, Bible-quoting pseudo-Christians who feel they are out to save the world—and want everyone to know about it. They are quick to quote such verses as:

"Do not be deceived: Neither the sexually immoral nor idolaters nor adulterers nor male prostitutes nor homosexual offenders... will inherit the kingdom of God." (1 Cor. 6:9)

They are eager to cite unnatural acts as being an abomination in God's eyes and completely ignore what is mentioned only eight chapters later in Romans:

"Then let us no more pass judgment on one another, but rather decide never to put a stumbling-block or hindrance in the way of a brother. I know and am persuaded in the Lord Jesus that nothing is unclean in itself; but it is unclean for any one who thinks it unclean." (Romans 14:13-14)

The fact is that we can twist the Bible to say whatever we want it to, to fit our own personal biases. If we are going to use the Bible as our reason for denouncing homosexuality, then we must also notice those things which contradict its condemnation.

Another falsehood which has hampered the Gay Rights movement on this campus and across the country is the concern about AIDS.

AIDS is not a gay disease. It can be passed among heterosexual people as well as homosexual people. It is a virus. Research has conclusively proven that AIDS can be passed among heterosexuals—it has been found in vaginal discharges; it can't be contracted from water bubblers, toilet seats or casual touching. In Africa, where heterosexuals are as sexually active as homosexuals, the disease is equally distributed between the two groups.

If AIDS is a punishment sent by God, then it has been sent to punish heterosexuals, monkeys and children, as well as homosexuals.

It is time we drop the near-sighted, uninformed accusations and start acting intelligently. We are faced with a social problem, and we need to work together toward its solution. There is not room in SGA for senators who cannot set aside their biases and work toward a unified solution to this campus' concerns. Christ did say that the most important commandment was to love God, but He also said that the Second Commandment was to love each other as ourselves.

So, if we are going to fling Bible verses, we had better keep love in mind.

Gay people are not oxen to be burdened with the insecurities and incompetencies of "straight" people. They are human beings—people who care, love, cry and hurt. Christ did not shun or ridicule those who were considered sinners in His time. He ate, walked and conversed with prostitutes, thieves and bums. He strove to understand them and their actions. They were human.

When Christ saved the woman from being stoned, He told the crowd that those who were without sin should cast the first stone. No one did. Christ understood that the woman was human. It's time we understood that, too.

If we truly want to show ourselves as Christians, then we'd better follow the example of GPU and strive for understanding.

I salute GPU for their efforts and for facing the actions of a few misguided senators this past weekend. GPU acted with dignity and with a Christ-like demeanor. They are the type of mettle that heroes are made of—to face seemingly insurmountable odds for the benefit of all. Congratulations, GPU.

Some more little known facts

Living together prior to marriage seems to have little effect on the marriage's stability, the March Reader's Digest reveals. Cohabitation as a testing ground for marriage hasn't really met the test, concludes researchers.

By what miracle of navigation do butterflies who've never been to Pacific Grove find their way here each year?

What should you look for in a mortgage? The March Reader's Digest advises that you shop around for a fixed-rate mortgage if you're planning to live in the house for five years or more and interest rates are relatively stable. If you're planning to move sooner, however, an adjustable-rate mortgage may be cheaper.

True or false? When you exercise the word is, "No pain, no gain." Only if you're training for the Olympics, cautions the March Reader's Digest. For the average person, pain is a warning, not a threshold that needs to be crossed to make progress.

In 1976, approximately 15 percent of high school students tested qualified for the Presidential Physical Fitness Award, the March Reader's Digest points out. In 1983, the same test was given to 84,000 students in Oklahoma. Now less than one percent of those tested reached this fitness level.

Every year thousands of monarch butterflies spend the winter in Pacific Grove, California, then fly hundreds of miles into Canada. The mystery, according to the March Reader's Digest, is that the following year subsequent generations of monarchs return to the same spot.

"I'll condemn all queers, male or female"

by R. Lionel Krupnow
Features Editor

The editor-in-chief grabbed me as I was heading out the door:

"Get over to the UC and interview Senato. Steed. Find out why the Student Senate cut GPU's funding."

"But I don't want to interview Senator Steed. He's crazy. The man doesn't have a brain." I tried worming away.

"Come now, we all have brains. It's a human condition. Besides, you're a man, even if you do wear an earring. You can handle it." He slapped me on the back and returned to his desk.

"Verdammt Sheis. . ."

"Go." He pointed his finger toward the hall.

...

All names in this interview have been changed to protect the innocent and the guilty.

Reporter: Senator, can you tell me why GPU's budget was cut?

Senator: The Finance Committee decides all those numbers whether for the Gay People's Union or anyone else.

Reporter: But isn't it true that you motioned for SGA to zero fund GPU?

Senator: Well, of course I did, boy. (He looks at me with a cocked head.) You ain't gay are you, boy?

Reporter: No.

Senator: Just wondering. Most men don't wear an earring. What happened? Get your ear too close to the stapler when you were stapling something?

Reporter: Something. Why did you motion for zero funding?

Senator: You must be gay. Those people are godless sinners. Don't you read the Bible, son? It says in Romans that those people ain't going to heaven, and I don't see no reason why I should support such heresy.

Reporter: But doesn't it also say in Romans that nothing is unclean in itself?

Senator: Well, you can't believe everything you read, now can you? (Hits my shoulder and laughs.) That's a joke, boy. Can't ya take a joke? You must be gay.

Reporter: Isn't it true that GPU had trimmed its own budget and asked for less money than they had the previous

red. (Laughs again.) I knew a Commy once. Wore a big, wool coat with a fur collar and talked like you. We ain't Russia, boy. We can't allow people nority, huh? That's it. They always give jobs to minorities: women, spinks, coloreds. This country has lost its dignity.

Reporter: Why did you want zero funding for GPU?

Senator: You don't see the problem here, boy. The Russians sent these AIDS-infested fags to our shores so they could weaken our population, insure an easy takeover of our country. Ain't you patriotic?

Reporter: I hardly think that AIDS could cause the downfall of our country. And, even so, what does GPU have to do with that?

Senator: I have conclusive proof that the Gay People's Union at UWSP met with Russian spies, exchanged dirty needles and started this whole

AIDS epidemic. We have to stop the Russian takeover here. It's our duty as Americans. We must support the Constitution.

Reporter: What about SGA's Constitution? Doesn't it say that students can't be discriminated against because of sexual preference?

Senator: I ain't discriminating! (He stands up, shakes his finger.) I'll condemn all queers, male or female. (He straightens his shirt sleeves.) I've got you on my list, boy. Godless Commies like you are going to be nipped in the bud. But, for now,

I need you. You can tell all your pretty boyfriend friends that I am going to see them burn in hell. (He storms away.)

Senator: Sure, they asked for less. They figured we might let that slide. But we're slicker than that, son. All senators ain't as stupid as some people think.

Reporter: What was the justification for zero funding, then?

Senator: Boy, you don't listen much. They're fags, boy. Queers. Happy boys. They have ways of raising their own money. Hell, they're in bed all the time. What do they need money for? We can't support prostitution and perversion, boy.

Reporter: Being gay doesn't make someone a prostitute. . .

Senator: You ain't a Commy, are you? Your neck's a little to go around exercising all sorts of perverted sexual practices.

Reporter: This is a free country, isn't it?

Senator: Sure, it's free. But how long do you think it's going to be free if we allow fags and dykes to run around, spreading AIDS with the touch of a finger?

Reporter: You can't get AIDS from touching fingers. But why was GPU's funding cut?

Senator: You keep changing the subject, boy. Don't you know how to interview people? How'd you get this job? A mi-

UWSP course examines the history of rape

University News Service

The history of rape has been researched at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point and the materials have been used to develop a course that is drawing "good student response," according to Professor Stephen Pistono.

The offering has become part of the curriculum of the women's studies minor. It has been taught during several previous semesters and will open again next spring.

Why a course on such a specific problem?

Pistono insists that sexual violence against women is a crucial issue in contemporary

American society. Some feminists argue that male sexual violence in the form of rape plays a critical role "keeping women in their place and did so historically as well. They maintain that women in the past rarely derived redress from the legal system and in many cases do not do so today," he reports, adding that he is in substantial agreement with their charges.

The 18-year veteran of the history faculty also says there is evidence to support feminists' contentions that rape must be viewed as a crime of violence and hostility rather than one of strictly passion. In many of the medieval cases he studied, rapes were "so violent and personal that the sexual dimensions are almost lost."

Pistono's course traces the history of rape from the ancient world to the present.

He explains that women in the Middle Ages were put through "excruciatingly painful, degrading and humiliating procedures" before their attacker could be put on trial for his crime.

In some Spanish communities, for example, the victim was required to walk around the walls of the town and call out her complaints and the name of the rapist as she made her way up to the gate of the castle, there summoning forth the town's elected officials to hear her grievances. The following Sunday she issued a complaint against the man with two relatives and two other citizens. The man could prove his innocence by simply bringing forth 12 male oath-helpers who swore that the accused was a person of good reputation whose denial of the crime could be believed.

Pistono's students learn that in 13th century England, the process a woman went through in making an accusation of rape was equally public and spectacular. She was required to follow six steps if she wanted to bring her assailant to justice: she was obliged to create a public outcry over the crime immediately after it took place, and to exhibit her torn garments and bleeding to men of good standing in the neighboring towns. The crime had to be explained to local law officers, a formal accusation was required at the first county court to be held, and the accusation had to be repeated before the coroners so that it could be taken down verbatim for the public records.

Many women could not face this long grueling process, according to Pistono, and others failed to bring charges against their attacker because there was a strong possibility that they would be arrested and imprisoned for false accusation. Feminists are "certainly correct," he maintains when they argue that a male-controlled legal system, historically, offered women little opportunity of seeking satisfaction for sexual crimes committed against them.

Still some positive advances have occurred in the history of rape laws, Pistono continues. In ancient societies, rape developed in their law codes not as a crime against the women but rather as a crime committed against her male protector. Rape was not damage done to her body, but damage done to his goods, to his property. Rape was not a crime against the victim, the woman, but against her husband or her father inasmuch as she was male-owned property to be possessed or robbed.

Beginning in the 12th century, Pistono's research reveals that church lawyers began to define rape as no longer a property crime, but a crime of violence against a person. Rape of a virgin or married woman was considered a major crime of the severity of assassination and treason.

There was a major exception to the rule. A husband could not be found guilty of raping his wife because by the very act of marriage she had given her prior consent to intercourse. This view of marital rape remained in effect until 1977 when a landmark change occurred in Oregon law which eliminated marriage as a defense against rape. John Rideout, a 21-year-old short-order cook from Salem, was tried under the law and found innocent. Ironically, the first man to be convicted of raping his wife while still living with her was sentenced to three to five years in Salem, Mass., in 1979.

Besides a consideration of rape laws, Pistono's course covers the topics of gang rape and its historical precedents and the sexual exploitation of lower-class women by men from the upper ranks of European society. The class also investigates trends and statistics concerning rape in contemporary America.

"I'll condemn all queers, male or female"

by R. Lionel Krupnow
Features Editor

The editor-in-chief grabbed me as I was heading out the door:

"Get over to the UC and interview Senator Steed. Find out why the Student Senate cut GPU's funding."

"But I don't want to interview Senator Steed. He's crazy. The man doesn't have a brain." I tried warning away.

"Come now, we all have brains. It's a human condition. Besides, you're a man, even if you do wear an earring. You can handle it." He slapped me on the back and returned to his desk.

"Verdammt Sheis. . ."

"Go." He pointed his finger toward the hall.

...
All names in this interview have been changed to protect the innocent and the guilty.

Reporter: Senator, can you tell me why GPU's budget was cut?

Senator: The Finance Committee decides all those numbers whether for the Gay People's Union or anyone else.

Reporter: But isn't it true that you motioned for SGA to zero fund GPU?

Senator: Well, of course I did, boy. (He looks at me with a cocked head.) You ain't gay are you, boy?

Reporter: No.

Senator: Just wondering. Most men don't wear an earring. What happened? Get your ear too close to the stapler when you were stapling something?

Reporter: Something. Why did you motion for zero funding?

Senator: You must be gay. Those people are godless sinners. Don't you read the Bible, son? It says in Romans that those people ain't going to heaven, and I don't see no reason why I should support such heresy.

Reporter: But doesn't it also say in Romans that nothing is unclean in itself?

Senator: Well, you can't believe everything you read, now can you? (Hits my shoulder and laughs.) That's a joke, boy. Can't ya take a joke? You must be gay.

Reporter: Isn't it true that GPU had trimmed its own budget and asked for less money than they had the previous

red. (Laughs again.) I knew a Commy once. Wore a big, wool coat with a fur collar and talked like you. We ain't Russia, boy. We can't allow people

nority, huh? That's it. They always give jobs to minorities: women, spinks, coloreds. This country has lost its dignity.

Reporter: Why did you want zero funding for GPU?

Senator: You don't see the problem here, boy. The Russians sent these AIDS-infested fags to our shores so they could weaken our population, insure an easy takeover of our country. Ain't you patriotic?

Reporter: I hardly think that AIDS could cause the downfall of our country. And, even so, what does GPU have to do with that?

Senator: I have conclusive proof that the Gay People's Union at UWSP met with Russian spies, exchanged dirty needles and started this whole

AIDS epidemic. We have to stop the Russian takeover here. It's our duty as Americans. We must support the Constitution.

Reporter: What about SGA's Constitution? Doesn't it say that students can't be discriminated against because of sexual preference?

Senator: I ain't discriminating! (He stands up, shakes his finger.) I'll condemn all queers, male or female. (He straightens his shirt sleeves.) I've got you on my list, boy. Godless Commies like you are going to be nipped in the bud. But, for now, I need you. You can tell all your pretty boyfriend that I am going to see them burn in hell. (He storms away.)

year?

Senator: Sure, they asked for less. They figured we might let that slide. But we're slicker than that, son. All senators ain't as stupid as some people think.

Reporter: What was the justification for zero funding, then?

Senator: Boy, you don't listen much. They're fags, boy. Queers. Happy boys. They have ways of raising their own money. Hell, they're in bed all the time. What do they need money for? We can't support prostitution and perversion, boy.

Reporter: Being gay doesn't make someone a prostitute. . .

Senator: You ain't a Commy, are you? Your neck's a little to go around exercising all sorts of perverted sexual practices.

Reporter: This is a free country, isn't it?

Senator: Sure, it's free. But how long do you think it's going to be free if we allow fags and dykes to run around, spreading AIDS with the touch of a finger?

Reporter: You can't get AIDS from touching fingers. But why was GPU's funding cut?

Senator: You keep changing the subject, boy. Don't you know how to interview people? How'd you get this job? A mi-

UWSP course examines the history of rape

University News Service

The history of rape has been researched at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point and the materials have been used to develop a course that is drawing "good student response," according to Professor Stephen Pistono.

The offering has become part of the curriculum of the women's studies minor. It has been taught during several previous semesters and will open again next spring.

Why a course on such a specific problem?

Pistono insists that sexual violence against women is a crucial issue in contemporary

American society. Some feminists argue that male sexual violence in the form of rape plays a critical role "keeping women in their place and did so historically as well. They maintain that women in the past rarely derived redress from the legal system and in many cases do not do so today," he reports, adding that he is in substantial agreement with their charges.

The 18-year veteran of the history faculty also says there is evidence to support feminists' contentions that rape must be viewed as a crime of violence and hostility rather than one of strictly passion. In many of the medieval cases he studied, rapes were "so violent and personal that the sexual dimensions are almost lost."

Pistono's course traces the history of rape from the ancient world to the present.

He explains that women in the Middle Ages were put through "excruciatingly painful, degrading and humiliating procedures" before their attacker could be put on trial for his crime.

In some Spanish communities, for example, the victim was required to walk around the walls of the town and call out her complaints and the name of the rapist as she made her way up to the gate of the castle, there summoning forth the town's elected officials to hear her grievances. The following Sunday she issued a complaint against the man with two relatives and two other citizens. The man could prove his innocence by simply bringing forth 12 male oath-helpers who swore that the accused was a person of good reputation whose denial of the crime could be believed.

Pistono's students learn that in 13th century England, the process a woman went through in making an accusation of rape was equally public and spectacular. She was required to follow six steps if she wanted to bring her assailant to justice: she was obliged to create a public outcry over the crime immediately after it took place, and to exhibit her torn garments and bleeding to men of good standing in the neighboring towns. The crime had to be explained to local law officers, a formal accusation was required at the first county court to be held, and the accusation had to be repeated before the coroners so that it could be taken down verbatim for the public records.

Many women could not face this long grueling process, according to Pistono, and others failed to bring charges against their attacker because there was a strong possibility that they would be arrested and imprisoned for false accusation. Feminists are "certainly correct," he maintains when they argue that a male-controlled legal system, historically, offered women little opportunity of seeking satisfaction for sexual crimes committed against them.

Still some positive advances have occurred in the history of rape laws, Pistono continues. In ancient societies, rape developed in their law codes not as a crime against the women but rather as a crime committed against her male protector. Rape was not damage done to her body, but damage done to his goods, to his property. Rape was not a crime against the victim, the woman, but against her husband or her father inasmuch as she was male-owned property to be possessed or robbed.

Beginning in the 12th century, Pistono's research reveals that church lawyers began to define rape as no longer a property crime, but a crime of violence against a person. Rape of a virgin or married woman was considered a major crime of the severity of assassination and treason.

There was a major exception to the rule. A husband could not be found guilty of raping his wife because by the very act of marriage she had given her prior consent to intercourse. This view of marital rape remained in effect until 1977 when a landmark change occurred in Oregon law which eliminated marriage as a defense against rape. John Rideout, a 21-year-old short-order cook from Salem, was tried under the law and found innocent. Ironically, the first man to be convicted of raping his wife while still living with her was sentenced to three to five years in Salem, Mass., in 1979.

Besides a consideration of rape laws, Pistono's course covers the topics of gang rape and its historical precedents and the sexual exploitation of lower-class women by men from the upper ranks of European society. The class also investigates trends and statistics concerning rape in contemporary America.

Spending spring break on a spirited trek

by Christopher Dorsey
Pointer Editor

Sacrifices. Each year a small band of UWSP students join together to trek 200 miles from Stevens Point to Cassville, home of a 1,400-acre nature preserve. The preserve is run by Eagle Valley Environmentalists, Inc. EVE is a non-profit organization which, as its name implies, emphasizes the research and management of the bald eagle. The preserve is also home to one of the largest over-winter populations of eagles in the continental U.S. The site is located on the banks of the Mississippi River and has been known to shelter up to 50 bald eagles on one winter night.

There are roughly 20 students who will be participating in this year's walk. Along with the students, local celebrities, including Vice-Chancellor Irving Buchen, Stevens Point Mayor Michael Haberman and Director of Student Development John Jury, will be walking part of the distance. In addition, the walk's sponsor, the Environmental Council, is trying to convince Senator Robert Kasten to partake in the action, but at the deadline of this article there were no guarantees.

Last year's walkers raised over $3,000 for EVE and expectations are that at least that much will again be raised this year. Some backbone participants in this year's walk will again be Tim and Cindy Byers and last year's coordinator, Peter Gaulke.

Spring break traditionally means sun and sand for many college students, but for eagle walkers it means counting the paces between rest stops. The walkers will be housed in shelters and school gymnasiums as they pass through Wisconsin Rapids, Monroe Center, New Lisbon, Hillsboro, Richland Center, Blue River, Woodman, Bloomington and, finally, Eagle Valley.

Why would these people give up their spring break for the eagle? It's a commitment to our nation's symbol. It will take more of this kind of spirited effort to prevent further declines in eagle populations. In 1872, when the U.S. Continental Congress adopted the bald eagle as our national symbol, an estimated 140,000 pairs of bald eagles came to breed in the lower 48 states. Now, about 1,400 breeding pairs remain in the continental U.S.—only one percent of the original breeding contributed to stifle a major recovery of eagle populations.

The walkers hope to gain public attention of the plight of the Eagle walkers travel 200 miles each break to raise money for bald eagles.

Why the decline? Despite the ban of DDT, other factors including habitat loss, toxic chemicals, shooting, accidents, lead shot and even acid rain have eagle through coverage in statewide medias. Many small-town newspapers along the 200-mile route have already begun coverage of the group and, as a highlight, last year's walkers were public. These programs include camping, environmental workshops, summer camps, cross country skiing, canoeing, pho-

Revolutionary Pulping
Raymond Young of the UW-Madison Forestry Department says his discovery of a new way to process pulpwood may cut paper mill energy and production costs by 30 percent or more, cause virtually no air or water pollution, and double pulp yields. The procedure, called "ester pulping," recycles the chemicals that separate wood fibers and also produces more of the pulp-processing chemicals.

Biodyne Chemicals, Inc., of Neenah, Wisconsin, is developing a pilot plant that will use Young's process to produce an estimated 10-15 tons of pulp per day. The plant is expected to open sometime this year, possibly in the Neenah area.

Wildlife Unaffected by Pipeline

It has been almost eight years since the trans-Alaskan pipeline began operation, and several recent wildlife studies indicate that the line has had little adverse effect on animals in the area. In two studies commissioned by the Alyeska Pipeline Service Company, scientists found that moose and Dall sheep populations were not noticeably affected by the presence of the pipe. Revegetation of the pipeline corridor with several types of grasses has attracted small mammals and birds, which in turn draw predators to the site.

CNR budget cuts bring mixed feelings

by Andy Savagian
Outdoor Editor

Organizations at the College of Natural Resources were among the many on campus that were cut financially by the Student Government Association, but the overall feeling at the CNR this week seems to be one of relief.

Last Sunday the senate of SGA voted on budget financing for student organizations. Practically every organization received some sort of cut in their operating budgets, including natural resource oriented students groups like The Wildlife Society, CNR Student Advisory Board, and Wisconsin Parks and Recreation Association. However, the reductions in these areas were not as substantial compared to other campus organizations.

Most of the people involved in these activities expressed disappointment in the decreases, but added it could have been much worse, and that the situation would just have to be dealt with.

Gigi Milcik, president of The Wildlife Society, said TWS was already operating at bare minimum before the cuts, but were as "satisfied as they can be." TWS was funded $4,048 last year, and will be funded $2,668 for 1986-87. Milcik added that the society would have to cut back on a variety of things, including nesting platforms. In the past, organization's members have built nesting platforms and donated them to area conservation groups. Now TWS may have to put a price on the platforms, which would cause problems for many conservation groups which are non-profit organizations.

A natural resource related facility that is smarting a lot more than most is the Schmeckle Reserve. The reserve received almost the same funding from SGA as last year ($12,600 in '84-85 to $12,700 in '86-87), but because of a $10,000 drop in revenue from the CNR, Schmeckle was in dire need of extra monies from SGA. Schmeckle's request for an additional $6,596 was not honored by SGA's finance committee.

"We were lucky to get $12,700," said Jeff Zehr, a graduate student who works at Schmeckle and was very involved in the push for more reserve funding. "At least we were able to hold our own," remarked Zehr, commenting on the other SGA allocated organizations that were slashed. Zehr speculated that the first activities to go will probably be a number of summer programs and summer help, with other cuts to be made at a later date.

Daniel Trainer, dean of the College of Natural Resources, also expressed disappointment over Schmeckle's plight, but added, "Schmeckle is a very valuable part of this campus." Trainer stated the CNR's instructional budget had to be cut due to state mandatory reductions, and Schmeckle lost money because it wasn't as directly involved with the instructional budget as other academic priorities. "Something had to give," said Trainer, "The Reserve is a very important program to the university and to the students at the university."

Students of all ages learn through CWES programs

by Gregory Scheder
CWES Writing Intern

The Central Wisconsin Environmental Station (CWES) means many things to a variety of people. Since the station's establishment in 1975, it has brought environmental education experiences to over 120,000 people. Activities range from school programs for grades K-12 to a week in the woods for people over 60 in the Station's Elderhostel program. A major focus of the Environmental Station is the environmental education of Central Wisconsin students. This is the audience which most UWSP students interact with through the programs at CWES.

To the grade and high school students, a trip to CWES means a practical experience in learning about the interrelationships of people and their environment. For the teachers who bring their students, the station offers programs to reinforce topics studied in the classroom. To students from the university who work at CWES, the station is a teaching lab to give them experience in teaching environmental concepts to young people. Dr. Mike Gross, associate professor from the College of Natural Resources (CNR), said it this way: "The Station provides leadership and model programs for people interested in teaching children about the environment."

Since its inception, over 300 students from the UW-Stevens Point have participated in teaching programs at the station. The majority of the students teaching at CWES are Resource Management majors from the CNR brought by some education majors from the College of Professional Studies. Most undergraduates participate in the course Natural Resources 376, Practicum in Environmental Education and Interpretation, which gives them credit for their efforts.

One reason for the success of the Environmental Station is its focus on instructing young people. While children are growing up, they learn through the impressions made upon them by their experiences. Many of the students working at the station feel that this early age is best for teaching people about the importance of the environment. Eric Nei, a UWSP practicum student, views his role as a teacher in this way: "While they're young, we can get kids to develop a value system geared to love and appreciate the environment, regardless of their previous experiences with nature." As a practicum student, Eric spends one day each week working with the staff at the station.

Between 10 and 15 practicum students are enrolled at CWES each semester. Tammy Peterson, also a practicum student, views the teachers at CWES as "providing a positive educational experience" and sees her job as "bringing the learning alive to benefit the students who come to the station." Practicum students work one day a week teaching at CWES along with two student interns who work every day of the week for the semester.

Student interns generally have a sincere commitment to continue in Environmental Education as a future. Julie Tubbs, one of the Spring '86 interns, sees her job at CWES as important because "the future belongs to the children...they have to be taught how to care for the environment," and she hopes to be instrumental in showing them how. Interns have greater responsibility than practicum students because they maintain day-to-day continuity of the programs. Andy Gallagher looks at his role as an intern as having a long term effect, "What I've learned about the environment in my college classes is something everybody should know...people have to see how they fit into the environment." As a Resource Management major, Andy wants to continue in youth education, and the Environmental Station offers him a background to "learn to teach others about the environment."

Undergraduate students are not the only people who work at the station. Four graduate assistants serve on the staff in a supervisory capacity, mainly as program directors, one day each week. Graduate assistants see that a day's programs run smoothly, and many have had previous experience teaching. "Marty Martin sees his graduate work at CWES as a logical step in his education. "I'm comfortable with my teaching skills, now I need some experience in the supervisory area, and working as program director gives me that opportunity." The station also provides a place for graduate students to do work on their Master's Thesis. Seven have been written in the past and two people are working on their theses this semester.

Students involved at CWES work outside the areas of supervision or teaching as well. Several are enrolled each semester as work-study students to help better understanding of wildlife and the environment in which the animals live. It is a unique program in that it involves, educates and entertains students and teachers in a very creative and innovative way.

The program was originally developed by members of the Western Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies and the Western Regional Environmental Educators Council. Extensive research, review and field testing preceded the final curriculum core that makes up Project Wild. The program, a spinoff of the successful Project Learning Tree, began in Wisconsin last April when the first workshop was held at the DNR's MacKenzie Environmental Education Center.

Project Wild consists of two activity guides; the first is for kindergarten through grade six and the second for grades seven through 12. Each guide contains about 80 course activities; these activities are the backbone of Project Wild's objective to teach wildlife diversity and value. Concepts the activities teach include wildlife ecological systems and responsible human actions, human values and the wildlife resource, awareness and appreciation of wildlife, and wildlife conservation.

Project Wild's curriculum "textbooks" are not the kind sold in stores, and that's the major reason for the workshop held at CWES last Saturday. To implement the program, the creators of Project Wild conducted workshops and courses to train people who wanted to use Project Wild in their classrooms, nature centers or parks. The activity guides, rather than be openly available to an inexperienced public, were used at these workshops to give trainees the knowledge and background essential to make Project Wild effective. Once trained, these people become Project Wild "facilitators."

Elizabeth Schmidt, a project facilitator and a coordinator of the CWES workshop, said the workshop participants were instructed by the use of the activity guides, communicating the project's ideas and activities to others, and given a background in Project Wild history.

Project Wild attracts a wide variety of interested parties, added Schmidt. Many are college students or nature center leaders with environmental education backgrounds, while others are teachers from all sorts of different, traditional fields of instruction.

It is this ability to supplement traditional subjects that holds the key to Project Wild. "A person can use it (Project Wild) anywhere... in any facet of their curriculum," said Schmidt. She also said Wisconsin facilitators hope to infuse the program into the state's curriculum and, at the moment, keep it 'teacher-oriented.' "The project is reaching so many more people... Wisconsin is really leaning toward environmental education being essential to the state's curriculum."

The many advantages of Project Wild reflect its diversity, flexibility and creative aspects. "One of the biggest advantages is that the curriculum is already prepared," concluded Schmidt. "It's involving, and it's not dry; students are going to get something out of it."

SAF's input, from its publication Forest Cover Types of the U.S. and Canada, gave the department significant background for its research on potential impacts of nuclear waste deposit sites on forests.

Lead Levels Drop
Lead levels in the Mississippi River system have dropped by 40 percent in the last decade — another sure sign, say scientists, that the antipollution laws limiting lead additives in gasoline are working.

Aerial Cone Harvesting
Hand-picking pine cones for use in reforestation programs may be on the way out. US foresters are finding that a Canadian device is a more efficient and productive way to gather cones. The aerial cone harvester (ACH), consists of a large metal cone-basket which is lowered from a helicopter over a conifer. As the ACH is lifted, cones are collected, leaving the tree's terminal bud unscathed.

The ACH can harvest 36 times more trees in a day than human workers, and at the same time bring in double the amounts of seeds per bushel of cones — at almost half the cost. Best of all, cones can be picked from the tops of trees closer to the time of their exact ripeness, allowing foresters to take full advantage of bumper crops.

Species spotlight

Skyborn eagles are being watched with a sharp eye

From DNR's Lifetracks

The bald eagle was adopted as our national emblem in 1782. By 1976, our Bicentennial, its existence was "endangered" in 43 states and "threatened" in five. Loss of habitat, pesticides and shooting caused the decline.

Before human settlement, bald eagles nested along waterways throughout Wisconsin. But logging, agriculture and summer resorts drove the birds from traditional nesting haunts. What's left is the territory around inland lakes and rivers in the northern third of the state and some places on the Great Lakes. However, Great Lakes birds are "iffy," and have had nesting failures in recent years.

In Wisconsin fish is the staple food in the eagle's diet and the inland lakes are relatively uncontaminated. When eagles feed repeatedly on fish that collect toxicants, the poisons add up until harmful amounts are stored in the body fat. In times of stress when these reserves are called on for breeding, nesting and laying eggs, accumulated poisons are released into the bird's bloodstream. Thin-shelled eggs that crack and break are the result. Embryos may not develop properly, or fertilization may be blocked.

Dieldrin, PCB's, DDT and its derivatives, and possibly heavy metals cause the trouble. These persistent chemicals are now banned but their residues still reverberate.

A lot of eagles die of old age and associated causes. For those that don't, shooting takes the heaviest toll. It accounts for 50 percent of the annual deaths despite the threat of a $5,000 fine and a year in prison. Often mistaken for other birds, bald eagles do not don their distinctive white heads and tails until age four. Until then, they resemble big, brown hawks (which may not be legally shot either!). Some people deliberately kill eagles because they hate all birds of prey.

Bald eagles mate for life, which may be as long as 50 years! They breed early in Wisconsin and around February begin their cartwheeling acts of courtship. Typically, they nest in tall pines or high on rock cliffs. It takes about a week for a mating pair to shape hundreds of boughs into a suitable "eyrie." This is no small task. One record eagle nest weighed two tons! Usually they return to the same nest year after year and in Wisconsin several nesting territories have been occupied for 40 or 50 years. One eyrie in Sawyer County has been used since 1918 — more than 60 years.

Occasionally a nesting pair will have two or more nests and rotate between them in different years. When the weight of the nest finally breaks a tree, the nest is abandoned. Windstorm and lightning also take a certain toll of nest trees.

Nesting eagles should be left alone. If disturbed they may give it up for the season. Hiking, snowmobiling and other recreational activities need to be well away from any nest tree.

Research and Surveys
Once again, records were set for the over-wintering population of eagles in Wisconsin. During the National Wildlife Federation's midwinter survey, cooperators reported sighting 211 bald eagles. The previous high count was 166 in 1984. A total of 138 observers were included in the survey.

gram with Charles Sindelar heading up a team of biologists to fly the nest sites and to band young birds. Four eaglets were removed from the nest and sent to Tennessee (2) and Indiana (2) for hacking projects in those states.

This study was done with funds from Section 6 and the "Adopt an Eagle Nest" program.

Karen Kozie, with funding from the National Parks Service, is doing an extensive study of the eagles nesting in the Apostle Islands National Lakeshore. Through the use of telemetry equipment, she will be following the birds through their winter migration. She has also studied food use, nesting, and fledgling behavior of the birds. Two of the nesting birds which died this season are being examined for possible contaminants.

Adopt an Eagle Nest Program
For the 1985 nesting season,

BER initiated a new program to increase public awareness of the plight of bald eagles and concurrently to raise money for the annual eagle survey and banding project. For a $100 donation, individuals or organizations are able to "adopt" a nest and help pay for its management and protection. The donors receive information on the status of the nest they adopted and any young that were raised in it, a photograph of young eagles in the nest, an "adoption" certificate, and a copy of Birds of Prey of Wisconsin.

Lumberjack Olympics

Around the turn of the century SAF, a rough and tumble breed of men known as lumberjacks were in the business of harvesting timber and shaping our present day Wisconsin. These people of yesteryear, the lack of other entertainment, often entertained themselves in engaging in friendly competition in the tasks of their jobs. Examples of these rustic games include log rolling, speedchopping, log throwing, pulp toss, axe throwing, crosscut saw races, and tobacco spitting.

"Lumberjack Olympics" are still alive and well here at UWSP. The Foresters Conclave which is sponsored each spring by the Society of American Foresters (SAF) has not only carried on many of the traditional logger events but has also added several professional forestry events including tree identification, and diameter estimation. This spring the Conclave will be held on Saturday, April 26, or the 27th in case of rain. In addition to numerous athletic and technical events, SAF is holding a raffle for an ATT computer, Jonsered chainsaw and many more prizes, in which they hope to earn enough money to buy a tractor for their annual pulpcut. Following the Conclave the Wisconsin State Chapter will be holding a free steak feed for all student national SAF members.

Nelson, Swift to be inducted into Hall of Fame

News Release

Gaylord Nelson and the late Ernie Swift will be the second and third members inducted into the Wisconsin Conservation Hall of Fame during ceremonies March 22 in Stevens Point.

Nelson, who heads The Wilderness Society, was in the city and spoke at the convention of lake management profession-ter on the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point campus.

Displays commemorating the lives and careers of Nelson and Swift will be added to materials put in place last year following establishment of the recognition program and the posthumous inductions of Aldo Leopold and John Muir.

Before taking over the chairmanship of The Wilderness Society, Nelson served three terms in the US Senate as a Democrat representing Wisconsin. He also is a former governor. In both positions, he won considerable recognition for his role in promoting new conservation practices. As a senator, he introduced and sponsored numerous bills including the first law to control strip mining, a ban on the use of DDT and a ban on the use of phosphates in detergents. He was co-author of the Environmental Education Act and is recognized as founder of Earth Day and Earth Week.

Swift, who died in 1968 in Rice Lake, retired several years earlier as executive director of the National Wildlife Federation. He began his career as a warden for the state and in 1947 became director of the Wisconsin Conservation Department, forerunner of the Department of Natural Resources. He later served as assistant director of the US Fish and Wildlife Service as well as the top officer of the Wildlife Federation.

The Wisconsin Conservation Hall of Fame foundation, chaired by UW-Stevens Point Professor Earl Spangenberg, is supported by 15 state organizations involved in conservation matters. The foundation's board voted in February to choose Nelson and Swift as the next inductees.

Spangenberg and the foundation's executive secretary, William Horvath of Stevens Point, said their group is interested in "spreading the conservation idea through the state and nation" by recognizing individuals "whose life and work have been important in the conservation movement."

Log house workshops offered

Minnesota

Great Lakes School of Log Building announces publication of its schedule of log building workshops for spring and summer, 1986. Ten-day sessions on "Scribe-Fit" or "Scandinavian" log construction are held monthly throughout the year.

All workshops are taught at the Great Lakes School Logging Camp in the Superior National Forest near Isabella, Minnesota, a few miles from the boundary waters canoe area. These residential owner-builder courses are open to both men and women, with special rates for couples and retired persons. Topics covered include tree cutting, log handling, chainsaw maintenance and safety, wood characteristics, hand tool skills, log scribing, notching, preservation, hoisting and other operations unique to this style of construction.

Besides the "hands-on" work with log buildings, sessions feature illustrated lectures on log furniture, toolmaking, and history. Tuition fee includes instruction, lodging, and use of some tools. Advance registration is necessary. For information write Great Lakes School of Log Building, 3544 1/2 Grand Avenue, Minneapolis, MN. 55408 or telephone (612) 822-5955.

Receives All-American honors

Harding finishes sixth at NAIA Tournament

by UWSP Sports Information Office

MINOT, N.D.—Richard Harding, a 177-pound UWSP sophomore from Athens, received All-American honors at the NAIA National Wrestling Tournament by placing sixth.

Harding won both his matches Thursday and advanced to the quarterfinals Friday. He then lost to Ted Bullerman of Southwest State, MN, 20-4. He bounced back to defeat Todd Thalken of Hearney St., NE, overcoming a 10-2 deficit to tie the match at 10 after regulation time expired. He then pinned Thalken 16 seconds into the extra period. Harding later bested Don Laurent of Adams St., CO, 11-5. This automatically qualified Harding for Saturday's competition.

He lost to Vince Dawson of Southern Oregon College by default, losing 6-9. Harding injured his forearm and was unable to continue, thus capturing sixth place.

Head Coach Duane Groshek was very pleased with the effort of Harding.

"I think Rich showed tremendous heart and a lot of guts," said Groshek. "In the match with the Kearney St. wrestler (Thalken), he came back from a 10-2 deficit to eventually gain the victory in the overtime."

Rick Harding

Groshek feels Harding's accomplishments are even more worthy of praise because he's only been wrestling four to five weeks.

"Rich was ineligible first semester and only started wrestling when school started second semester," he says. "Harding only wrestled 12 matches before nationals and wound up 12-6 for the year."

Two other Pointers, Ryan Burns at 118 pounds and Jay Labecki at 158 pounds, were eliminated in the first round of competition.

Burns lost to the No. 5 seed Mike Mazurkiewicz of Northern Montana Univ., 5-0, and then to Fred Kelly of Barber-Scotia, N.C., 9-1.

Groshek felt the four-week layoff between conference and national meet competition hurt Burns.

"I think Ryan lost a little edge from not being in competition. Psychologically, he was not where he wanted to be."

Labecki had a bye in the first round, lost to Jack O'Connor of Central State, OK, 14-3, and then succumbed to Brad Hanson of Minnesota-Morris, 7-4.

"It was unfortunate that Jay cut his lip in the O'Connor match," says Groshek. "If he wouldn't have done that, I feel he could have won the match. Even O'Connor came up to him after the match and said he thought he was in trouble before the injury occurred."

Other WSUC participants placing were Brett Corner of UW-La Crosse, second at 142; and Brian Keller of UW-River Falls, third at 167 pounds.

Netters win season opener

by Karen Kulinski Staff Reporter

The UWSP men's tennis team opened the season in fine fashion by winning their own Pointer Invitational this past weekend.

On Friday night, a doubles tournament was held and the Pointers captured all but one of the possible nine points to easily defeat UW-Green Bay, Northern Michigan and Northeastern Illinois in a round robin setup.

Winning at number one doubles for UWSP were Bill Diehl and Bryan Zowin, at number two Gary Polston and Jon McElhaney, and at number three Mike Briones and Peter Benedict.

"Our team is young and to have success early in the season is most beneficial," said Pointer Coach Dave Nass. "However, even though we won this event, I'm far from pleased with our technique. We have plenty of homework to do before we get our doubles technique up to a level that will be conference competitive."

The Pointers swept two meets in Saturday's Pointer Open with a 6-3 victory over NMU and a 9-0 win against Northeastern Illinois.

Winning singles matches for the Pointers were Polston, Diehl, Zowin, McElhaney, Benedict, Briones and Doug Greenberg. Doubles victories went to Diehl-Zowin, Briones-Benedict, Polston-Briones and Greenberg-Stew Stone.

"In singles, Bryan Zowin and Gary Polston each won both of their matches," said Nass. "It's especially notable that each took a turn at playing the number one singles spot and won. Gary did a fine job with his serve all weekend. His opponents could not handle them. Bryan got better as the competition went on. In his final match and debut at number one, he played a superb all-court attack game against a N.E.I. veteran."

"Zowin combined with Bill (Diehl) to win both matches at

High school wrestling classic successful

by Karen Kulinski Staff Reporter

Top senior high school wrestlers representing Wisconsin and Minnesota met head-on at the Berg Gym on the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point campus Saturday afternoon in the first of two dual meets between the states.

The score was neck-and-neck until Minnesota captured the last three matches to win the Minnesota-Wisconsin Wrestling Classic, 34-23.

Thirteen wrestlers competed for each state, and another 13 traveled to Minneapolis Saturday to face different wrestlers from the Gopher state.

Top wrestlers representing the area were Tran Brook of Nekeosa, Paul DeCarlo of D.C. Everest, John Carl of Auburndale, Cliff Ange of Athens, and Rick Seefeldt and Rodney Roth, both of Stevens Point.

All participants and coaches thought the experience was fun and hoped the program continues in Wisconsin.

"The meet has been fun and the group of kids was just great," said Wisconsin Coach Vern Pieper of Stoughton High School. "They have been just a super group in a meet like this. It's important that we get good representation from our state and schools, and we did."

Brook won his match at 98 pounds, 15-2, over Jeff Nelson of Fergus Falls.

"I was nervous going into my match," Brook said. "There were only two guys in my weight class, so we didn't have a wrestle-off. It was exciting to be here and I had the chance to meet and get to know the other wrestlers."

DeCarlo, who carried a 31-7 record into the meet, defeated Phil Tangen (a state champion from St. James) 6-4 at 112 pounds.

"This type of program is a great idea," said DeCarlo. "Not only do you get to meet kids from another state, but you wrestle with guys you've never wrestled against before. Now our previous opponents are our teammates."

In the 132 weight class, Karl of Auburndale High School lost his match to Todd Jackson of Staples, who finished second at State, 6-2.

"The rivalry was there," remarked Karl. "They wanted to win just as bad as we did. I'm glad we have tryouts, unlike Minnesota, who just pick their wrestlers. This way you can make sure you have the best wrestlers there."

Dan Borski of Apple Valley used an illegal throw on Ange of Athens, which resulted in a default. Ange hurt his neck in the match and was credited with the win at 138.

"Before, we had wrestled towns in dual meets and were going out to beat them, but now we have grown to be friends

Angelfish ninth at Nationals

by Scot Moser Staff Reporter

SPOKANE, WA — The UW-Stevens Point women's swimming team culminated its most successful season in the school's history with its best finish ever in a national meet by taking ninth place in the NAIA National meet held here this weekend.

Claiming the title of national champion was Central Washington University, followed by Pacific Lutheran College, UW-Eau Claire, UW-Milwaukee, Fairmont State College, Canada's Simon Fraser University, UW-Green Bay, and UWSP.

The strength of the Lady Pointers' performance was evident in the number of women their squad had named to the All-America team. Eight women flew back to Stevens Point as All-Americans, including Laura Adee, Theresa Calchera, Jan

UWSP students place in Bodybuilding Championship

by Kent Walstrom
Sports Editor

Four UWSP students competed in the Wisconsin Collegiate Bodybuilding Championships held this past Saturday at Eau Claire.

Judy Ziolkowski (Novice and Open Lightweight divisions) and John Hintz (Heavyweight Novice) placed first in their respective weight classes while Jon Keener earned a third in the Middleweight Novice division and Rick Miller a fourth in the Lightweight Novice division.

The competition, open to all male and female students in the University of Wisconsin system, included Novice and Open divisions. The Novice bracket is for those who have not placed first, second, or third in a weight or height class in any bodybuilding contest. Those who have previously finished second or third in a Novice contest are eligible to compete. The Open division is reserved for all competitors, providing they are a student in the UW-system.

Ziolkowski, who also claimed the women's Overall Championship, is a senior from Stevens Point and will graduate this spring with a major in Psychology.

"When you do something like this, you really need a lot of support," said Ziolkowski, who began the sport just over three months ago. "It's not an ego trip, but you need to have the confidence to go up there (on stage) and do it."

Hintz, a junior studying wellness and also a resident of Stevens Point, has been active in bodybuilding for nearly a year. Along with UWSP's three other competitors, Hintz trains without the use of steroids or other unnatural bodybuilding aids.

Keener, a junior from Fort Wayne, Indiana, majors in Wildlife and developed his bodybuilding routine over the last nine months.

"It was hard work, and I want to credit everyone who helped me and offered encouragement throughout my training," said Jon. "I'd also like to thank Joe Kruse for putting up with me during my diet," Keener quipped. "He deserves a good deal of credit."

Miller, a Business and Advertising junior from Milwaukee, has participated in the sport of bodybuilding for two years and, like his male counterparts, trains at the UWSP Health Enhancement Center.

It was Miller's second bodybuilding competition, while Ziolkowski, Hintz and Keener were entered for the first time.

In the women's competition, those weighing up to 114.5 lbs. compete in the Lightweight class, while those over 114.5 lbs. fill the Middleweight bracket.

For the men, those weighing up to 154 lbs. compete in the Lightweight class, those from 154 lbs to 176 lbs. make up the Middleweight class, and anyone entered over 176 lbs. competes in the Heavyweight class.

All contestants were judged in three basic categories: 1) symmetry (balanced proportion of muscle groups in relation to each other), 2) mass and muscle development, and 3) posing routine.

Although routines are developed in order by the individual competitor, seven mandatory poses were required for the men and five for the women.

Awards were given for first through third places in each weight class and to overall winners in both the Novice and Open divisions.

Swimmers finish 7th

by Scot Moser
Staff Reporter

SPOKANE, WA — The number seven seemed to be the lucky one for the UW-Stevens Point men's swimming team which competed at the NAIA National meet held here last weekend. The Dogfish finished in seventh place in the meet with a squad of seven swimmers and ended up the weekend with seven All-American athletes.

Winning the NAIA National title was Central Washington University, followed by Drury College, Denver University, UW-Eau Claire, Fairmont State College, Bemidji University and UWSP.

Dogfish named to the All-America team included Bret Fish, 800 freestyle relay; John Johnstone, 50 freestyle and 400 freestyle relay; John Rudeen, 400 medley relay; Jeff Shaw, 400 and 800 freestyle relays; Andy Woyte, 400 medley relay; and Jeff Stepanski, 50, 100 and 200 freestyles, 400 medley relay, and the 400 and 800 freestyle relays. Individually, it was Stepanski stealing the show, winning the 50 in :21.3, placing fourth in the 200 free (1:44.0 on Friday) and capturing third place in the 100 free (:46.6 on Saturday).

Stepanski, however, was only one of an elite group of seven who worked together to contribute to the Pointers' impressive overall finish. On Friday, Brumbaugh, Woyte, Rudeen and Stepanski combined to finish seventh in the 400 medley relay in a time of 3:39.0. Saturday saw Brumbaugh, Shaw, Johnstone and Stepanski making up the 400 freestyle relay which took fifth place in 3:10.69. Earlier on Thursday, Fish, Shaw, Brumbaugh and Stepanski formed an 800 freestyle relay that ended seventh in 7:06.

Coach Red Blair was pleasantly surprised by the Dogfish's seventh place finish in the meet but was frustrated with the facilities in Spokane.

"The pool at Whitworth College was a slow pool for a national meet to be held in — not a single national record was broken by the men this weekend," Blair said. "Take Stepanski for example. I know he

The Pointers had defeated UW-Whitewater, 65-61, to earn at least a share of the WSUC conference title for the fifth consecutive season. Two days later the Pointers defeated UW-Platteville to win the title outright.

Kulas and twin post Tim Naegeli were the main instruments behind the Pointers turnaround from an early season 1-5 record to a 22-7 finish, including a string of 15 straight wins.

"After our first game against Whitewater (a 65-61 loss at Whitewater) we held a team meeting and talked things over," said Kulas. "We knew we had to play a more intense style of basketball if we were going to win the conference."

"The key to our play was that we just had to go out and do the things we had been doing in past seasons, namely, to play good defense and hustle," added Kulas.

Naegeli felt the team played up to its potential. "With a new coach we each had to learn our new roles on the team, but once we did, everything clicked in. It was great to win the title outright."

The basketball career of Kirby Kulas at Stevens Point ended with the 47-46 loss to UW-Eau Claire in the District 14 championship game. As co-captain of this year's team, he averaged 13.7 points and 6.9 rebounds per contest and was named to the All-WSUC team and District 14 team for the second straight year.

He transferred from UW-Green Bay after the 1982-83 season and has started all 59 games as the Pointer center. Kulas set a school record by playing 1084 minutes in 30 games during the 84-85 season.

A stalwart rebounder and tireless worker, Kulas has the ability to complement the players around him. "Kirby does the little things that make others look good," beamed Naegeli. "He finds the open passing lanes and sets good picks so people can get the open shots." "I think he's made me a better player. We have been able to complement each others talents the last two years," added Naegeli.

number one doubles. Bill had some return of serve problems, but counterattacked that with an outstanding weekend-long serving demonstration.

"I'd like to congratulate our team on a job well done. I used every player on the roster except for one man who is out with an ankle injury. At one point or another, every one of our men won a match. That's a positive way to open a season when you're dealing with a team comprised almost entirely of first and second-year players."

The Pointers will host St. Norbert's in a dual next Tuesday, March 18, beginning at 3 p.m.

and work as a team," commented Ange. "We work together instead of being enemies. We were also able to see different styles of wrestling, which was very beneficial."

Seefeldt, who entered the meet with only two losses in 32 appearances this year, faced the champion from Canby, Tuumo Karila. The match at 155 ended in a 5-6 tie.

"It's nice to wrestle in a meet like this because in a way, you get one step ahead of everybody else," the Point star said. "This is definitely a good program to get into."

Roth, a state champion from Stevens Point, met third-place state finisher Mark Meier of Princetown in his match at 185, but came up short, losing a 12-8 decision.

"The only pressure I had coming into this meet was the fact that I had won State and everybody was expecting me to win, and I lost," said Roth. "Overall, I think the program should continue to be just for seniors because it gives them one more chance to prove themselves. I became friends with the other guys and hope to see them again."

"It's neat that these guys, after going through a strenuous month of tourneys, can put on their same uniforms and now be part of the same team," Coach Pieper added. "It was a great experience for everyone involved. The public didn't really know what was going on. But next year I think they will be more aware. The wrestlers worked their tails off and we even cut some practices short because they were working so hard. It was a nice experience and I hope it grows."

INTRAMURALS

The past week was slow for Intramurals because of the Pointer basketball game. Also, some events scheduled for Tuesday, March 11, were cancelled because of the concert and were rescheduled for the Monday after break. Check the Intramural bulletin boards for time and place. Tournaments will also start on the Monday after break.

Correction from the Intramural Swim Meet Results: 4 North

Roach finished second in the men's division, not 2 North Smith as reported.

Upcoming Events: Men's and Women's Badminton — Entries due March 17, Tourney held March 19 from 7 to 11 p.m.; Inertube Water Polo (men and women), Softball (men and women), Men's Floor Hockey and Men's Indoor Soccer — Entries due March 19 with play starting after break.

ers' "power in the post" is junior Tim Naegeli, a native of Racine.

Naegeli had to assume more of a scoring responsibility with the loss of All-American Terry Porter. His smooth fifteen-foot jumpshot and lightning-quick first step when driving to the basket helped him lead the Pointers in scoring, averaging 19.2 points per outing.

Naegeli feels his game is continuing to improve every year. "The last two years Coach (Dick) Bennett has made my fundamentals skills better, and this year Coach Eck has really helped to improve my all-around game."

In addition to being selected to the All-WSUC squad and District 14 team, Naegeli was recently named co-captain for the 86-87 season, an honor he will share with Walter Grain and

Keith Kulas.

Naegeli will begin next season in pursuit of Terry Porter's all-time scoring record. He is currently 12th on the list, 412 points behind Porter. "It isn't something that I'm too concerned about, but it would be nice to have. I just want to go out and help the team win ball games," Naegeli added.

You can bet Naegeli and the Pointers will be back again next year.

was ready to crack the low :20s (in the 50 freestyle) if he could have been in a faster pool. If that would have happened I don't think anyone could have caught him in the 100 (freestyle) because a fast 50 would have created a different atmosphere for the rest of the meet."

Blair said that he had boarded the plane for Washington hoping his team might pull out a 10th place finish overall and that the Pointers' seventh place finish shows how well they did swim in spite of the slow pool.

Angelfish, cont.

Gelwicks, Roxanne Fink, Pam Steinbach, Jeannine Slauson, Kathy Froberg, and Lynn Palmquist.

Jan Gelwicks, as she'd done all year, continued to dominate for Stevens Point. On Friday, she captured fifth place in the 400 individual medley (4:56.4) and sixth place in the 100 breaststroke (1:11.6). Saturday saw her finish ninth in the 200 breaststroke with a time of 2:36.6.

Also on Friday the Lady Pointers placed two relays in the top 12 as Fink, Gelwicks, Calchera and Steinbach formed a 200 freestyle relay which placed fourth 1:41.3 (a new UWSP school record); and Adea, Fink, Froberg, and Gelwicks combined in the 400 medley relay to take 12th.

Calchera started things off on Saturday with a 11th place finish in the 100 freestyle while Froberg followed suit by finishing 12th in the 200 butterfly (2:19.8). Adea just missed breaking into the top 12 taking 13th place in the 200 backstroke in a new school record time of 2:21.6 and Gelwick wrapped up Saturday's individual action with her ninth place breaststroke finish.

The 400 freestyle relay of Calchera, Gelwicks, Steinbach and Fink also took sixth on Saturday with a new school record time of 3:45.1.

"The fact that we broke seven school records this weekend is very indicative of our performance. We have been riding pretty high all season I didn't think that would change when we got out to Washington.

"This is our first season being eligible to swim at the NAIA national meet and I've always felt that, if we did swim the NAIA's, we could break into the top ten in the nation. We obviously proved that here."

Both Froberg and Adea were honored in Washington for their academic prowess as well as their swimming accomplishments when they were named to the NAIA Academic All-America team.

need. SGA's own Constitution, as a spokesperson from GPU pointed out, mandates unbiased decisions. Too often students have put trust in their government—and the government failed them.

Perhaps we should remember that Student Governments are a product of the Vietnam era, their original purpose was to provide students with the truths and with a fair voice to the higher administration. Today it seems the original concept has been forgotten and all that is left is an organization that stands for everything students of the '60s abhorred—power, politics and policies.

20 years ago.

Zach stated, "The future belongs to those who aren't afraid to learn. In the future, education won't be a right, but a responsibility. Those that continue to learn will have the power and the responsibility in the future."

Zach suggested these books in which one can learn more futuristic thoughts: Jobs With a Future, by Marvin Centron and Reinventing the Corporation and Mega Trends, by John Neshith.

Saint Pat, cont. from p. 9

great portion a beer at the celebration, commemorating his casting out the snakes. As most people were stopping their chatter and lying down to sleep on tables, Patty started to walk off, his eyes staring at the sky—like he was looking for God.

We never saw Patty again. He walked toward the riverbank and that was the last I ever saw of him. I guess God took him to that holy barley patch in the sky.

But we can all remember Saint Patty by drinking some of his creation and wearing green (he liked the green snakes the best). Patty would have wanted it that way.

Stress, cont. from p. 5

so prepare. You also know graduation will arrive, so begin now to plan for the change. Doing some basic planning may be overlooked by concentrating on now. In other words, don't let those tests sneak up on you.

The adage goes, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." All work also causes stress to build up in your system. Have fun. Plan for music, poetry, sports, hobbies, whatever, and build it into your system. Get some physical exercise daily to help relieve stress. Be moderate and consistent. Try not to become anxious before a test. You just need to relax. Use meditation, yoga, deep breathing or simply relieving stiff neck and shoulder muscles.

Keep a positive attitude. This little sentence is so important that it is finding its way into medical journals. You may want to discuss your feelings with a friend or relative, if you can. Try writing your feelings down. (Don't forget to burn the paper later.) At times, it may be helpful to seek professional assistance.

Learn to tolerate and forgive. Don't hold grudges against yourself or another person, that only takes energy away from something else. Understand the perspective from which others see, yet don't become dependent on your support systems. A support system may contain not only people, but little rituals that take the place of self-confidence.

Above all, know yourself. Identify your strengths and weaknesses. Strive to overcome your fears and phobias. Learn to recognize your abilities and accept your limitations.

Stress can be prevented just by following the above suggestions. The message behind the suggestions is to know yourself, understand and listen to your body. Your body is a machine just like a car; both are major investments.

the matter with them?

But I'm persistent. I couldn't just give up and let her wallow in ignorance. I had to keep her mind active. So I told her, "You remind me of a—" "Stop," she said. "You'd better be nice."

"Nice? Nice? I'm always nice."

You know, it hurt though. So I decided not to tell her what she reminded me of. No way, no thank you. Then she realized that she'd made a mistake. She was really sorry she said. Please. I reminded her of what? "A wombat," I told her.

"A wombat?"

She gave me the old raised-eyebrow-once-over and said she had to go to the bathroom. She actually went into my bedroom and grabbed the dictionary. Then I heard something hit the floor. She ran into the room yelling.

"That's another damned marsupial."

"Re-enforcement," I told her.

She didn't seem too happy. "What other animals do I remind you of? Come on. I want to know."

"A vole," I replied, "a dugong, a hyrax, a duckbilled platypus, a—"

She was out the door before I knew it. I didn't even get to griffin or auk.

Years and years of reading and I share it with her just like that. And not even a thank you Brian.

Thiel/Geiss, cont. from page 3

This is why student representation is only as effective as the communication between SGA and the student body. It is our goal to promote open lines of communication between SGA, faculty, staff, student organizations, residence halls and the student body. Your representatives need to know your concerns, and you need to understand the issues affecting you.

As a student of UWSP, you should be concerned about who represents you. There are several issues, for example: tuition increases, classroom section cuts, and segregated fee allocation affecting you right now. Wouldn't you want an informed, qualified, vocal president and vice-president with interests and goals similar to your own representing you on these issues?

We feel we are that qualified team you would want representing you at Faculty Senate, United Council, and other important meetings as well as effectively leading the SGA Executive Board and senators. Both Steve and I have been actively involved in student leadership positions during our college career.

I, Lisa Thiel, am presently the president of the University Activities Board and serve on both the campus and community Advisory Council and the Athletic Committee. I've held several student organization positions ranging from RHA Rep. to Athletic Entertainment Programs Coordinator. I was voted Campus Leaders Association's 1984-85 student leader of the year and received a 1986 Who's Who award.

Steve Geis, my vice-president candidate, is presently an experienced SGA senator from the College of Natural Resources. Previously, Steve was a Resident Assistant for two years and last year's president of RA Council. He is also president of Waters Resource Association. Steve is a senior with a major in water chemistry, and I am a communications and business administration major.

We are not people out for a title or power. We sincerely want to instate, with your input, efficient decision-making processes, ensure that senators are using their vote in your best interest, and create an informed atmosphere where students can communicate their concerns to SGA and see results.

If elected as president and vice-president of SGA, Steve and I would, with the help of the most qualified executive board we can recruit and the direction of the senators you choose to represent you March 18, do our best to ensure not only that you're informed about the issues affecting you, but that your voice is sought. You are the wheels and SGA is the driver. Without the proper direction and follow-through, you will be spinning your wheels. With the right choice, Thiel and Geis, you can guarantee progress.

but have had first hand experience with the planning and presentation of such. We empathize with organizations and feel that the budget process can be improved and, like all other aspects of our proposed administration, plan to take steps to improve them.

It is also our contention that student senators, students and administration must make an attempt to open lines of communication and strive to maintain them through publicized open meetings and increased attendance by members of the senate at hall councils, organization meetings and university functions. We will also encourage students to become members at large on our various committees.

Our third contention is in regards to representation. Diane and I feel confident we can utilize the talents and coordinate the directors in achieving goals set by the senate. We further hope to provide senators with a chance to focus on issues that they and their constituents find important such as STOP 21, tuition increases, minority issues, etc. We also want to provide a chance for senators to be trained and educated thoroughly about Student Government Association and all issues. We will put the necessary emphasis on the importance of making informed decisions. By having more informed senators, the environment for effective and accurate representation will be created.

We feel that our background in Senate and the other organizations will provide us with a broad base by which to work from. We can, due to our experience, use our resources to assist in the process of making decisions. We can make more informed and justified decisions by further utilizing the resources of United Council and United States Student Association and a network of communication whose information would be a great assistance to us all year around. With the experience, interest and commitment we have, we hope to provide the Senate with the guidance needed and the support which is essential. To achieve this though, two things must happen:

1st: students must believe in the vitality of their opinions and vote in the upcoming election, and

2) elect the best candidates to serve as Senators and President and Vice-President.

We feel we are the best choice for President and Vice-President. Our dedication, commitment and concern to see that students get a fair deal by not only saying issues will be addressed but by taking action on such, and our genuine interest in serving UWSP students, qualifies us for these positions.

So we are asking you to join us at the voting booth on March 18 and cast your vote for the BEST candidates.

University News Service

The University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point has been chosen as the headquarters of the newly-formed Wisconsin Institute for the Study of War, Peace and Global Cooperation.

The institute is a consortium of 21 public and private universities and colleges in Wisconsin, devoted to encouraging and legitimizing research and teaching about the roots of organized violence, security issues and the factors necessary for a just global peace. Funding is provided by its members.

The central office was established at UWSP because of the campus's location in the state and its offer to provide office space in the lower level of the Albertson Learning Resources Center.

Sharon Roberts of Stevens Point was appointed part-time executive secretary in January. Prior to moving here last August, she operated her own business, editing manuscripts and providing financial services to physicians.

Roberts will become involved in writing grants to obtain more funding for the institute's teaching resource center and in compiling an inventory of all peace studies courses, information and activities throughout the state.

Serving as officers are executive director Rick Ringle, a professor of English and Scandinavian studies at UW-Madison, and associate director Kent Shifferd, coordinator of peace studies at Northland College.

UWSP's representatives were involved with designing the consortium due to the university's long-time sponsorship of its own peace studies program. Charles Rumsey, who coordinates UWSP's program on a rotating basis with other faculty members, says the curriculum here was developed in the early 1970s as a response to the ROTC program's start on campus. The late George Dixon, a member of the sociology faculty, was instrumental in its development.

A member of the history faculty, Rumsey was one of the state-wide institute's founders and served for a time on its executive council. He says the purpose of the consortium's programs is to educate students and the public about social responsibility, the need for arms control and the futility of nuclear warfare.

He was succeeded on the executive group by William Skelton, also of the UWSP history faculty. His affiliation with the institute involves attendance at three meetings a year and ongoing interaction with other representatives. He says this may be the only consortium of its kind in the country.

Some of its programs available to member schools include:

— A Campus Visitors Lecture Series involving members of the executive committee who are available to speak at campuses throughout the state.

Edward Linenthal, associate professor of religious studies at UW-Oshkosh, has been invited to discuss "Ideological Civil War in America: The Committee on the Present Danger and Physicians for Social Responsibility," at UWSP on Wednesday, March 12. The public is invited to attend the free presentation at 7 p.m. in Room 116 College of Professional Studies.

Ringle, the institute's executive director, will give a free public lecture, "What Art, Literature and Music Have to Teach about War and Nuclear War" at UWSP on Monday, April 7. His address in 101 Collins Classroom Center is at 7:30 p.m.

Registration for the conference and information are available through the institute's office in UWSP's Learning Resources Center, 900 Reserve St., Stevens Point, 54481 (346-3383).

"Pit Stops" offered enroute to Florida

by Melissa Hardin
Staff Reporter

To help ensure a safe trip, coffee, doughnuts and advice on highway safety and responsible alcohol consumption will be offered to Spring Breakers on their way to Florida at three Budweiser "Pit Stops."

Located at highway rest areas in Henryville, Indiana (off I-65S), Valdosta, Indiana (off I-75S) and Savannah, Georgia (off I-95S), each "pit stop" will be open March 7-9, 14-16 and 21-23.

A moderation message will be reinforced at the pit stops through distribution of Anheuser-Busch's "Know When to Say When" and "Buddy System" alcohol responsibility materials. The Buddy System concerns the topics of how to drink responsibly and how to hold safe, responsible parties. How to avoid drunk driving by setting up a phone system in your dorm or organization is included. Bumper stickers, blood-alcohol card keychains and other items will also be distributed.

Robert D. Orr, Indiana governor, said at the opening last year, "The Budweiser 'Pit Stop' program represents a unique, first-of-a-kind partnership between the world's largest brewer and state officials in promoting highway safety."

This is the second year the pit stops are being offered. Last year, thousands of college students made a stop; this year even more are expected.

The pit stops are sponsored by Budweiser along with the State Tourism and Highway Patrol Departments of Indiana and Georgia.

Budweiser has scheduled activities for Spring Break vacationers in Daytona Beach, Fort Lauderdale, Fort Walton Beach and South Padre Island.

Busch Cityski will be at Daytona Beach March 25-27. A ski slope of finely crushed ice will be constructed by the Texan Hotel. Competitive ski races and free skiing for the public will be featured. Instruction by top professionals including Billy Kidd, first American to win an Olympic medal for skiing, will be offered.

Daytona Beach is also the site for two Los Lobos concerts March 18 and 24. They will be performing at the Bandshell in Daytona at 2 p.m. both days.

All four locations will have trivia, dance contests and aerobic classes as part of non-consumption activities. Vacationers can also take part in daily live radio broadcasts.

The moderation message will be reinforced by distribution of the "Know When to Say When" and "Buddy System" alcohol responsibility materials and other Spring Break merchandise on the beaches.

TREAT YOURSELF ROYALLY.

SEMESTER IN SPAIN

Not just for Spanish majors only, but for everyone: beginners, "in between" students, and advanced. Put some excitement into your college career!!

BEGINNER OR ADVANCED - Cost is about the same as a semester in a U.S. college $3,670. Price includes jet round trip to Seville from New York, room, board, and tuition complete. Government grants and loans may be applied towards our programs.

Live with a Spanish family, attend classes four hours a day, four days a week, four months. Earn 16 hrs. of credit (equivalent to 4 semesters taught in U.S. colleges over a two year time span). Your Spanish studies will be enhanced by opportunities not available in a U.S. classroom. Standardized tests show our students' language skills superior to students completing two year programs in U.S. Advanced courses also.

Hurry, it takes a lot of time to make all arrangements.

SPRING SEMESTER - Jan. 30 - May 29
FALL SEMESTER - Aug. 29 - Dec. 19 each year.

FULLY ACCREDITED - A Program of Trinity Christian College.

SPORTS

March 16

Come cheer on the men's volleyball team as they host the University of Minnesota at 2:30 in Berg Gym. Admission is free!

March 17, 18 and 19

University Film Society presents a "Dustin Hoffman Double Feature."

"The Graduate"—This 1967 classic stars Dustin Hoffman, Anne Bancroft and Katharine Ross. Mike Nicholas won an Oscar for best director of this film where a post-grad (Hoffman) has affairs with both Ross and her seductive mother (Bancroft), causing tremendous complications.

This film also features one of the best soundtracks ever provided by Simon and Garfunkel. Shown at 7 p.m. only in the UC-PBR.

"Kramer vs. Kramer"—This 1979 film stars Dustin Hoffman, Meryl Streep, Robert Benton and Jane Alexander. An Oscar winner for best picture, "Kramer vs. Kramer" portrays the story of an upwardly mobile husband (Hoffman) whose wife (Streep) has just walked out, leaving him to fend for himself and their young son. Shown at 9:15 in the UC-PBR. Admission is $2 for both films, or $1.50 for each.

March 13-14

Don't miss UAB-Visual Arts grand finale! "E.T.—The Extraterrestrial" will be shown in the UC-PBR at 7 and 9:15 p.m. This will be your last chance to see E.T. for awhile because it is being taken out of print for the next seven years. Admission is $1 with UWSP student I.D. and $2.25 without.

Theater

March 11-16

UWSP Theatre presents "Dance Theatre." Some of UWSP's most talented performers display their talents in a variety of dance numbers. Contact the UWSP Box Office for more information, x-4100.

LIVE

March 14-15

He's a comedian! He's a musician! Actually, we're not quite sure exactly what he is, but we like to call him the hilariously funny Scott Jones. This Friday and Saturday at 9 p.m. in the UC-Encore will be filled with jokes, music, exotic toys, rubber devices, a hilarious slide-show, and much, much more all for only $1 with a student I.D. Come on down and check out the show! Sponsored by UAB Contemporary Music.

March 15-16

It's here! It's the Eighth Annual University Antique Show and Sale. Sponsored by the UWSP Athletic Department, it is the biggest in Central Wisconsin. Come on over to Quandt Gym on Saturday, March 15, from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. and on Sunday, March 16, from 11 a.m.-4 p.m. and relive a part of the past. For more information, call x-3257.

Thursday, March 13

Stressed out? Exams got you down? Relax and take a massage. Attend a relaxation and massage workshop from 6:30-8:30 p.m. in Rooms 125/125A of the UC. It will be the most relaxing two hours you've spent this semester! Sign up at the Campus Activities Office. It's free and everyone is invited. Co-sponsored by UAB Leisure Time Activities and the Lifestyle Assistants.

PERSONALS

PERSONAL: Gonzo: Congratulations on your A.D. job. 2-N Roach.

PERSONAL: Johnny Hintz: Nobody thought you could win the bodybuilding competition. Guess you showed all those people who laughed. I knew you could win. Congratulations. Gootch.

PERSONAL: Ann: It's been fun, it's been grand and I'm looking forward to more of the same.

PERSONAL: A, D and D: Weekend: Thanks for putting more thrills into good old 105 than we've seen in awhile. Panamon lives!

PERSONAL: Kari, Gary, Amy, Julie and Robin: Thanks for coming to Wausau! I hope you had as much fun as I did, and that none of you suffered from my cooking. Miss ya all! Annie.

PERSONAL: Jay: At last, your very own personal. I miss you. See you soon. Love, Annie.

PERSONAL: Vote, vote! Tuesday, March 18, for the candidates who care. Vote Ormond/Barton for the next president and vice-president of Student Government. Students for students.

PERSONAL: Hey Gift: Wake up! Get a job, get a life, learn to ski and then you'll be somebody. Hope you're feeling better!

PERSONAL: To Lis's Sister: Glad to see you didn't have to get your stomach stomped in Cambodia. Just a friendly reminder—if you are going to sleep there, close the door. Please don't jump, we luv ya. Tootsie Roll.

PERSONAL: Wisconsin BOB: Roses are red, violets are blue, the sugar was willing but where were you? All tied up at the Second St. Pub maybe? E.A.

PERSONAL: Hi Honey: What do you want for breakfast? Might as well put in your order now—FAT chance that I'll lose it all in six days. But will you still love me? Clair.

PERSONAL: Kay: Roses are red, violets are blue, I love you and your body, too! Meet me at Mr. Lucky's this weekend so we can get lucky! Love: Kunta.

PERSONAL: For commitment and dedication vote Ormond/Barton for president and vice-president of Student Government. Students for students.

PERSONAL: Honey: Can you watch the kids while I go away this weekend? I'll miss you, but you know what I'll be dreaming. Love, Me.

PERSONAL: To our Reptile Friend: We'll be looking forward to seeing you in the show on Sunday. Did you have to learn any new tricks? The S/A Club.

PERSONAL: Keep it alive. Celebrate your Christian faith and keep it growing. Join us Sunday, 10:30 a.m., Peace Campus Center, Vincent and Maria Dr., right behind Hal's Grocery.

PERSONAL: Hey Dudes: It was a fun ski weekend even though the weather didn't cooperate. Sorry, I can't explain that one. Why don't you ask Orville? He knows everything.

PERSONAL: Anne or ? Ya know, schizophrenia can be helped by the nice men in the long, white coats. Those flies you are grabbing can't taste that good, ya know. Love ya, The Kid.

PERSONAL: Zonk: A female on I-West that eats whole Domino's pizzas—a female that gets out of hand and sleeps a lot. Statzo.

PERSONAL: Hey Bob: The

Gator and Scorp want to party with you in Daytona! We do, too, although we know we won't remember it. Luv ya. Sue and Kristy, your roommates.

PERSONAL: Slimepuppy and Magpie: We will sell no cheese before it's wine. Thram! Best of luck with your favorite second eight-week course. I'm now a member of the 8 o'clock club, but I wish I wasn't. Love, Penguin Feet, a.k.a. Wench.

PERSONAL: Only three weeks to go! Let's show the Sig Tau spirit and have a great initiation for our pledges Bernie, Joe and Dave. Pledge Educator.

PERSONAL: Hey you awesome bunch of skiers: Thanks for making it a fantastic weekend up north. I sure had a good time, but I don't think we ate enough. More M&M's anyone?

PERSONAL: Deb: Hope things work out this Saturday. Remember, I'll always be there for you. Thanks for being a great roomie. Love, me.

PERSONAL: Carl: Country Kitchen called and decided to comply with your request for ground sausage for your friend with no teeth.

PERSONAL: John idolizes Terry and Terry idolizes Lance and Lance idolizes Tommy who idolizes Brad who idolizes Troy; but then again, who doesn't idolize God?

PERSONAL: Happy Birthday, Bridgette: Did you get any green M&M's on your b'day cake?

PERSONAL: Super Stud Express: Holy "Beep!" Quit pushing ordinary people off the campus sidewalks. By the way, how do you get into Collins? "All aboard for Menasha." Purple Haze.

PERSONAL: Tom: Congrats on your medical school acceptance and thanks for making the past 2 1/2 years very special for me. Love ya, Mel!

PERSONAL: C.B.: I love you. Happy two years, V.B.

PERSONAL: To Nora the Birthday Girl: Your eyes like March are soon to be eyes like dimes. One thing to remember on your birthday... a night w/out... is like a foot without a sock. The Nora's.

PERSONAL: Happiness is... having you as my money and being your doll. I love you.

PERSONAL: Dear Lar Butt: We still love you! Olaf, Gage, Freddy and Otis. P.S. Mike loves you, too!

PERSONAL: Spring fever, catch it! Daytona is the place where Projectionship '86 is gonna shake up the human race. Just one week 'til we take a space on the beaches to tan our faces.

PERSONAL: John Exo: Seventeen days until South Padre. Guess who?

PERSONAL: Hi Punkin Seed! I love you lots and I'm glad that you're my Big Squish. Have a Happy Day!

PERSONAL: BYRO: Cheer up! Somebody loves you.

PERSONAL: Hey Gunderson: How about some more of that great graffiti! Not to mention the place.

PERSONAL: Hey all you "Woodiest!" Meet me in the Founder's Room—Old Main on Thursday, March 13, at 7:30 p.m. Our friend Dan Peterson will be talking about "Tree Farm Industry." See you there. J. Applesed.

PERSONAL: Bobo: Once again—Spring Break. Beer and Brown Boys will be more abundant in Florida than Texas. We drive the first two states, then party. Sun and beach. Sammy.
