Schultz wins mayoral election
Successful in every Stevens Point ward
by Karen Rivedal
News Editor

Scott Schultz was elected the new mayor of Stevens Point in a big way on Tuesday. Schultz captured 63 percent of the vote, winning all thirteen city wards. Feigleson, a former Stevens Point Poior, got 37 percent of the vote.

"In a word, I'm elated," says Schultz of his win. "It's really gratifying. We spend months and months knocking on doors, visiting people, speaking and speaking. Then it boils down to months visiting people, speaking and speaking."

You spend months capturing 63 percent of the vote, Feigleson, got 37 percent of the vote.

As for the city of Stevens Point, Feigleson bears it no ill will. "Stevens Point is the best and Stevens Point is what's important. We don't have a peanut gallery here. We all work to support the administration that's in office."

Also on Tuesday's ballot was a referendum vote for a state-run lottery and pari-mutuel betting.

The state as a whole supported both the lottery and pari-mutuel betting, by a margin of 64 and 52 percent, respectively. Portage County, though, opposed the racetrack betting by 6,444 to 5,852 votes, or by 53 percent.

County voters did support the lottery, however, with 60 percent in favor. State-wide support was slightly higher at 84 percent.

Asbestos removal scheduled for May

Students will be able to breathe easier in the art rooms in the Fine Arts Building, and in the chemistry labs in the Science Building after this summer.

According to Mary Williams, special assistant to the chancellor, the art studios will undergo a $240,000 renovation. These changes, involving ventilation and lighting, came after numerous Dept. of Industry, Labor and Human Relations citations said the rooms needed ventilation and building, a fire alarm around the ceramic kiln—which would keep a fire from spreading to new furnace hoods, and a canopy hood over a kiln.

There will also be work done on the lighting and paint booth and fan in these rooms. Williams said although some of the work is being done to meet codes, "We are doing a considerable number of things that were not cited for.

Williams said the ventilation system is "too small for the present amount of use. Some things have become obsolete quickly. We're trying to get as good ventilation as possible."

Competition fierce in trivia 1987
by Trudy Stewart
Features Editor

This year's Trivia Weekend featured the closest competition in the top 10 rankings of any contest in the past five years, according to Paul Heling, public relations director at WWSP. 900 points is the top 10 could have won. Usually the Network team goes to the front and stays there all weekend.

But, this year, Network was actually out of the top 10 sever al times and finished second. The team that took first place honors in 1987 was Hour 54: Where Are You! In their main day together, Hour 54 is actually two teams from previous years--Info Maniacs and Ghost of a Chance—which got together in an effort to defeat the seemingly omnipotent Network. At 1:20 a.m., Monday, Hour 54 received their first place trophy amid much shouting, cheering and backslapping.

It was questionable, though, whether there would even be a first place trophy to award. About 9 p.m., Sunday, said trophy was kidnapped—by an unnamed team which has been in the contest since its beginning—and held ransom. The team relented, however, and gave a series of "running" directions that led eventually to the trophy's location.

Although there were some concerns about the computer system—it wasn't certain that the radio station's new computer would be operational until just two days prior to the contest—things went remarkably smooth. "The questions were better written this year," said Heling. "Only 12 were thrown out as opposed to 16 last year. But there were a couple that caused a sink.

One medical question caused a new operator at St. Michael's Hospital to get as good ventilation as possible."

A parade officially opened the trivia weekend last Friday, "Hour 54: Where Are You!" took first place, beating the seemingly omnipotent Network.
Car swallowing

This is ridiculous.

We’re at this university that purports the importance of student’s rights, student’s health. Students.

And yet on Monday the University Affairs Committee decided not to talk about the Parking Service proposal that students are obviously opposed to. The committee was not deciding on whether to kill the proposal, or increase faculty parking fees or even alter the proposal. They were deciding on whether or not to talk. And six faculty and staff members said no.

The proposal is flawed.

One example: It states that, “All campuses, with the exception of Platteville who included parking with room rates, and Stout and River Falls who had lower rates for students, have the same rate for staff and students.” For those on the Faculty Senate, look on “Attachment 4.” Six of the 12 campuses have lower rates for students.

The proposal also suggests that students can be used to benefit the faculty and visitors. Consider this statement: “These increases ($32,000 from student parking fee increase, and $41,000 for increased fees – of which 85 percent will be student) would allow Parking Services to continue to operate... and to continue to improve and maintain parking lots for UWSP’s staff and visitors.”

This was stated two weeks ago in The Pointer, but evidently these flaws don’t matter.

But why the opposition to discussion? Selfishness? Is it, perhaps it’s “I believe the proposal is accurate and fair.” If so, then why the refusal to discuss it? Perhaps it’s because when discussed, the proposal falls apart.

Opposition to talking about the proposal was headed by Robert Baruch of the Student Life Administration.

Student Life.

Baruch argued that University Affairs already decided on the issue. He also grabbed parliamentary procedure and said that it wouldn’t be “proper” to reconsider the proposal.

Robert Baruch. Student Life. You know, that place where "students" are the center of concern. Nice representation.

Now the proposal is on the Faculty Senate agenda for April 15th.

"No," should be the response from Faculty Senate.

If the answer is "yes" then this purported concern for students is nothing but helium. And it will also mean that this proclamation of shared governance is nothing but bullshit.

Tuition isn’t the only expense UWSP students can expect to pay more for next fall. Besides the proposed 12 percent tuition hike, student fees for auxiliary operations are also slated for a 6.5 percent increase overall. Only the Student Activity fee rate will hold even.

Auxiliary operations are user-supported, which means students foot the bill; the absence of tax dollars is filled by student fees. Housing, food service, segregated fees and parking fall into this category. Proposed fee increases originate on each campus and are sent to the Board of Regents in Madison for final approval. Assistant Chancellor for Student Affairs Fred Leaflgren, whose area’s programs are largely student-driven, disagrees less immediate revenue budgets out of what the require- or auxiliary operations that request.

Fred Leaflgren, whose area's programs are largely student-driven, disagrees less immediate revenue budgets out of what the require- or auxiliary operations that request.

“The auxiliary budgets are internally driven. We devise our budgets out of what the requirements and needs are here. What causes the rates to go up are inflation and salary increases.”

UWSP Chancellor Philip Marsh- all will relay the auxiliary budgets to Madison by week’s end. The Board of Regents will approve or alter proposed increases in May.

Funding for areas in the auxiliary operations that receive state or federal tax dollars, which includes the academic department budgets, is less certain. These areas await summertime state legislative budget hearings for final allocations.

This year, enrollment cuts scheduled for next fall have complicated the task of budget planners in auxiliary operations. The cuts are part of a UW System goal to curb enroll- ment by 7,000 students over the next four years. At UWSP, these cuts are currently focused on the incoming freshman class. Fewer students in this group equals less immediate revenue for auxiliary operations that remain dependent on student fees.

Leaflgren concedes the impact of dropping enrollment on student fees increases. “Enrollment cuts are the big thing. For resi- dence halls, that contributes to high percentage of the increase. It’s to compensate for the drop in the number of people that we anticipate.”

Correspondingly, students who enter UWSP next year, or the 14 and 20-meal plans and 3.3 percent for room and board.

In the area of Segregated Fees, the University Center and Text Rental fees both reveal high percentage increases. The 15.4 percent increase in Text Rental is 100 percent courtesy of SMART. The Faculty Senate voted in February to implement the comprehensive computer software program in the text rental fee increase. Students will pay $9.40 more over two se- mesters. The 14.8 percent in- crease in the University Center fee translates into a $10.29 yearly increase for students.

Leaflgren says this increase is largely “in anticipation of De- bot Center renovations,” budget.

Budget Focus: Health Center requests 6.4% fee increases

by Karen Rivedal

The 6.4 percent increase re- quested by Health Service for 1987-88 certainly sets no prece- dents. Last year, Health Service requested a 13.7 percent increase. If the Regents approve the proposed fee for next year, Health Services will cost each full-time student $75 a year, up from $70.69 this year.

Dr. Hettler from Health Ser- vice says that requests overall of the proposed increase is be- cause of the enrollment cuts scheduled for next fall. The rest is needed, he says, for the nor- mal salary increases and infla- tion effect.

varied health services free or at reduced rates. Hettler says all of the standard procedure lab work we do here is free— blood counts, urinalysis, etc. Unlimited visits are free. That saves students $50.00 a year. Health Service also mentions the Health Center’s full pharmacy, a service he claims no other UW campus, other than Madis- son, offers. “If we didn’t have this pharmacy, and we could cut it, students would have to go buy their drugs somewhere else. Just on birth control pills alone, the pharmacy saves stu- dents $100.00 per year.”

Current non-physical exams are also free. Hettler does not guarantee, however, that fees for these services will not be charged last year, even with the full 6.4 percent in- crease.

Hettler says, “We’re hoping to avoid that.”

fees to students for some of the services currently offered free. They suggested a charge for routine physical exams and gynecological exams as two possi- bilities, stating that other uni- versities already use this sys- tem. SGA said the income gen- erated here would be enough to cut the requested fee increase to 3.5 percent.

Another SGA recommenda- tion, this one from the Execu- tive Board, called for a flat $1 increase and the formation of a representative student commit- tee. However, when these ideas were presented at the April 2 SGA Senate meeting, it was de- cided that insufficient informa- tion was available to determine if the requested increase was justifiable. They passed a resolu- tion in opposition of an increase until the Health Center ad- dresses this concern.

Raj Pillar, the SGA budget examiner who was involved in studying the Health Center budget, said the way it was done makes it difficult for SGA to suggest specific cuts. “It’s hard to break anything down, what the money is being used for. That’s not how we do a budget. We have to justify line by line exactly what things are

by Keith Uhlig

Staff Writer

Of all the services offered on campus, the UWSP Credit Union is one that students cannot use. The Credit Union, which in- creased 91 percent in 1986, serves employees of UWSP and the Wisconsin Interscholastic Athletic Association. The reason students cannot use the service, according to Richard Rothman, chairperson, is because “as years ago, it was set up for classified staff and faculty.”

Rothman says it would be possible for students to use the Credit Union if it were a sepa- rate entity and not part of the university, but it would require a change in its charter.

"I’m not sure we offer much that students would be interested ed in," said Rothman. The Credit Union offers no checking. It is only open six hours a day and it would be no easier to obtain a loan through the UWSP Credit Union. "It would almost be the same as going through a regular bank," said Rothman.

Rothman said students could benefit because "it would be a chance for them to get a loan and keep the money in town. It’s easy and it’s local. Our in- terest rates are roughly the same as the other banks."

Lisa Thiel, current SGA presi- dent, could see no pressing reason for trying to open the Credit Union for students, although she feels it would be nice for the students to be able to use it. She said, "Yes, there are some conveniences on campus, but because of the short hours and lack of checking, it would seem to me Stevens Point Credit Unions would serve just as well."

in the chemistry labs is also outdated. The present fume hoods, which take up the bad area, are now located on the ceiling. These will be replaced with individual fume hoods located on the benches. "They will do a much better job," said Williams.

These improvements to the chemistry labs will cost $230,000. The funds will come from the Health and Safety Allocation, which are state allocated funds. The changes to the labs were initiated when a science student wrote a letter to the then president of the Board of Regents and complained about the amount of fumes in the labs. Both projects are to begin right after school ends in May, and should be ready for use by the fall semester.

Parking proposal

To UWSP students:

You can give Izonne De-Smet a call, or Doug Radtke or even Bruce Staal. You’ve probably seen at least one of these names up by a classroom clock along with a phone number and bidders are encouraged to ask you about it? Well, let me explain!

The three individuals mentioned above, along with 86 others, are your faculty senators. The names and phone numbers beside each classroom clock are worth a giving a call. Why? Because the members of the faculty senate, these people will be deciding in the near future whether or not you’ll have to pay an additional $20 or $25 for next year’s parking.

When you call, make sure to ask them how much their rates will be increased if the current proposal is passed. If they’re not sure, tell them zero ($0.00). It’s not only the easiest number to remember in this proposal, it’s the smallest.

SIA is currently addressing this lopsided proposal to the University Affairs Committee. After it leaves this committee, it will enter the faculty senate. SGA needs your help to defeat this proposal. Faculty senate members need to know that a $20 or $25 increase can’t be justified and that YOU just won’t tolerate it! Isn’t five minutes of your time worth it?

Respectfully submitted,

Gasperic gets tough

While mulling through the previous week’s edition of The Pointer, I came upon this rather curiously article. After reading the Letter to the Editor by Mr. Matt Clarke, I came to the conclusion that his impotent personal attack on myself deserved a clarifying response.

Mr. Clarke, I was hired by the head editor of the student newspaper, Dan Dietrich, because he liked my emotional interest in polities, my political viewpoints and the manner in which I present them. I was given a column to write about personal political/social opinion and given a free reign on structure and content. The forum in which I present my opinions is strictly political. I leave personal opinions and beliefs to the people who haven’t the intellect for you readers. And, if Clarke gets tough, so do I. I am not stating nothing in my articles that thousands of other journalists around the world haven’t already observed.

Consistency

To the Editor:

In last week’s editorial Karen Rivedal stated that Ms. Whitehead should have the right to change her mind about giving up Baby M after having willingly entered into a legally binding contract. She went on to “We are taught, most of us, to deal with the consequences of our decisions.” Anyway though, Ms. Rivedal doesn’t think that Ms. Whitehead should have to deal with the consequences or her decisions, or did I miss something?

By the way, this letter was not motivated by an inability to understand what I cannot expec.

It is instead a plea for consistently applied standards. What’s good for the gander should be good for the goose.

Sincerely,
Wolfgang Siebenreich

Reagan reads literacy initiative wrong

by Kathleen Golke
Staff Writer

Adult illiteracy in our nation, Ronald Reagan stated in 1985, "holds back too many of our children, costs the nation, too, pay a price." That price, according to Reagan, endangers "national security, our economic prosperity, and our ability to compete in the international marketplace." Reagan asked us to join in the Adult Literacy Initiative, to "let the lights burn late...to help others help themselves to the American dream." But did Reagan prove again how easily his administration forgets to be the role model of their own patriotic campaigns to preserve "our national security." A house sub-committee to which Reagan handed over his responsibility to, an education sub-committee, to which Reagan handed over his responsibility to, the American people should be considered as an entity separate from Ronald Reagan and his hired hands whose "lights" are obviously burning late...else. A very profound or difficult task as to where that somewhere is would be the publication of one's name. And certainly their idea of "national security" is not shared by many U.S. citizens. Should we agree with Reagan that the price we pay for illiteracy is immense? Illiterate people take away from the rest of us those low-paying, labor intensive jobs like farm worker jobs most of us would not even consider. We might also ask why so many American industries are leaving the U.S. Is it because people in Korea or in Japan are better speakers and writers of English? And what about all those dangerous illiterates creeping into the military? Are they dying to press SDF missile buttons because they can't read? It's doubtful.

No, Ronald Reagan, many of your reasons behind the need for a Literacy Initiative, nor will many buy the inflated self-praise the Department of Education has given itself so much of.

Reagan isn't reading people very well. Although thousands of communities have responded to his literacy initiative, it is not because they fear for their children's security in the same way he does. It is because brave people have come forth from 54 to 69 all over this nation and have admitted: "I can't read English. Will you please help me?" Native speakers, foreign born Americans, people who have worked hard all of their lives, people in jails, people on welfare, and people who have fought in our wars, U.S. veterans who managed to pass incredibly simple literacy exams at Armed Forces recruiting offices across this country, are the people who ask for help.

The people who respond by volunteers have quite a few adults learn to do it because they know they will drastically improve the life of an individual. They do it because admitting to illiteracy takes a special kind of courage. Volunteers "let the lights burn late" because in some way, they all may become the victims of ignorance—a kind of ignorance Reagan does not mention.

Lawlor receives literary fellowship

UWSP News Service Release

William Lawlor, an associate professor of English at UWSP, is one of three state writers who received $5,000 literary fellowships from Governor Tommy Thompson recently.

Lawlor received the award for three stories he has written and published over the last three years. The fellowships were sponsored by the Wisconsin Arts Board and presented by the governor in ceremony at the WHA Television Studio in Vilas Hall on the UW-Madison campus.

Seventy-one writers competed for the prizes, winners of which were chosen by a national panel of judges.

Toth, who is an English professor at Macalester College in St. Paul, opened the 12th Annual Rites of Writing. Tuesday night with a reading of several autobiographical essays to a small crowd in the Wright Lounge. A petite brunette, Toth delighted the audience with an animated presentation that defied her stated age (47) and academic standing (Ph.D.).

Her first selection, "What Happens When You Write a Memoir," deals with the letters and phone calls she received after her first memoir, "Gigglings: A Small-Town Childhood" and "Ivy Days: Making My Way Out East." They tell, respectively, of growing up in Ames, Iowa, and attending the Ivy League Smith College on a scholarship. The essay will be published later this year by the New York Times Book Review.

Written in the form of a how to article, her second composition, "How To Prepare For Your High School Reunion," offers suggestions on how to recognize your classmates after 35 years. The essay begins with Totto's way to decide what to wear and how to face the emotion arising from renewing past relationships.

The third essay read by Toth was entitled "Gigglings." It is part of a fictional work about her grandmother. Toth proposes that giggling has not received the attention it should and could be a solution to major world problems. Imagine, she said, what would happen if Reagan or Gorbachev "broke wind" during a peace summit. Then dissolved into giggles. Perhaps giggling might be a viable way to reduce tensions and establish a common ground.

Semester abroad: “Crying our way through Hungary”

by Paula Kramer
Special to the Pointer

Before this trip, I read somewhere that the best travel stories come from the most disastrous trips. After this trip, I can tell you it is true. I can also tell you that the stories derived from disastrous trips can be more than stories of trials and tribulations; they can also be tales of adventure, suspense and surprising ways to have fun.

“Expect the unexpected,” said Helen Cornell, director of International Programs. After 10 days, Lynn said, “We have had enough of the unexpected to last us the rest of our lives.”

We left Chicago on Jan. 5 and arrived in Athens Jan. 16. In those 12 days we shared water, food, clothing, body warmth, tears, frustration, disappointment, despair, fear, longing and laughter.

Our adventures started early with a late plane from Chicago. It flew us to Belgrade, Yugoslavia, where the airport bus refused to take us to the train station in town. We scattered to several taxis for expensive and variously hair-raising rides to the station. On the way, a cab broke down on a bridge and we had to wait until another one returned for its passengers. Trains in Yugoslavia often ran late, but our train left on time, and we missed it.

The next train left four hours later.

Dr. Lazlo Portnoy of Josef Attila University in Sieged, and the bus met our train in Subotica and we drove to the Hungarian border. After passing through the passport and customs checks, we found that our bus wouldn’t start. Luckily, the border guards helped us push-start it. (We actually pushed that bus uphill a bit, but it wouldn’t start until we got smart and pushed it downhill.)

Four days later, as a light snow fell, we left Sieged with George, a university professor, and our newly appointed guide.

The snow continued through the night and all of our first day in Budapest. We trudged through several inches of unplowed, unshoveled snow to the bus stop, where we waited in the numbing wind for a crowded bus. We crammed ourselves into it anyway, forcing the doors to stay open despite the warning buzzer as we pushed and pulled bodies and luggage into any open space. Tail Kenny had to crouch in a back corner, while Lynn, crushed next to him, cried from claustrophobia. George told us to get off after 12 stops, but the bus broke down about halfway. We dragged ourselves off the bus and into a nearby subway station, staying together in the masses of people as we went up and down stairs and escalators to catch our train. We arrived, finally, at George’s sister’s house.

Having the afternoon to ourselves, we ventured out in small groups to see more of Budapest. Andrea and Amy returned from a pastry shop to tell us that the girls working there had thrown two bottles at them which shattered nearby. Apparently, neither was hurt. Their best guess was that the guys who were in the pastry shop at the same time had been the shop girls’ boyfriends. Did they think Andrea and Amy were rival?

George took us to the train station late the next night to catch a train to Belgrade and our scheduled plane connection to Athens. Warning us a last time about the Gypsies, he left us on our own. Our train came in (late) and left (late); our compartments were bitterly cold. We were on our way to Athens and warm; visions of hot showers and warm beds awaiting us that night sustained us. Standing in front of the train station as we watched for the airport bus, Jennifer and I dreamed about Athens. We never have to be cold anymore, she said.

The bus arrived, we stowed our luggage in a compartment underneath (instead of on top of us), and sank into the luxurious red seats for an unusually comfortable ride. The airport meant salvation to us. But relief turned to despair when a uniformed man snarlingly informed us, “Your flight is canceled. The airline has canceled all flights on strike.” The unexpected again. We talked about rescheduling the flight for Belgrade, but instead voted to get on another train that night that happened to be on our way to Athens.

The airline promised us an empty train, with first class compartments.

Again, we waited late into the night, harassed by drunken crowds of people who were seeing their friends and brothers off to the army; taunted by men. That was also the night of Annette’s 21st birthday. She and Liz commemorated it by walking themselves locked inside the dinging hole-in-the-floor bathroom.

The train arrived (late) about 3 a.m. The unexpected: it was full, people were standing in the aisles. The only available first class compartments had a piece of cardboard propped in front of the window and snow was drifting into the corners on either side of the window. We faced the prospect of standing up all night on a dirty, overcrowded train reeking of liquor and other unpleasant odors.

Half of our group gathered near a filthy washroom, some sitting, some lying down, singing or sleeping all standing night. Kenny stood in the space between the cars because he couldn’t sleep, and stuck his head in the snow. Cold air poured from the outside. A conductor looked pitying the rest of us in a car further back, probably because of the two children in our group, and let us into the compartment with the missing window and snow in the corners.

We piled luggage onto the seats next to the missing window, and eight of each other’s feet in a fruitless attempt to stay warm.

In the morning, enough people got off the train for us to switch cars once or twice, finally ending up in the first class compartments promised us by the airline. Many of us settled into sleep, confident that we were safely on our way to Athens. But in Northern Greece, in Thessaloniki, the unexpected struck again. We were rudely awakened with orders to get off the train because—can you guess?—trains in Greece were also on strike. Our train was not going to Athens. We had minstries to pack up and get ourselves and our luggage off the train. Mrs. Dixon, Joel and several pieces of luggage were still on the train when it started to move again. The train in My Grandmother Hazel detected milk. It was okay in rice pudding and coffee, but you didn’t drink it straight. Only children drank milk. When I was eight, Grams was a sturdy 5’3” and towered over me; when I was 18 she was a fragile 4’10” and had fractured her hip twice in 18 months.

My grandmother probably had undiagnosed osteoporosis; a crippling bone disease characterized by an increase in the likelihood of wrist, hip and vertebral fractures in older adults. Osteoporosis has multiple causes, including decreased estrogen levels in post-menopausal women; lack of weight bearing exercise (walking, jogging, etc.); inadequate calcium intake; cigarette smoking; consumption of excess caffeine or alcohol; family history; and sex and race.

Your body can’t make its own calcium and if you don’t eat calcium rich foods daily, your body literally draws the calcium out of your bones for necessary functions. If there is a constant depletion of calcium without adequate intake, bones become weakened, brittle and susceptible to fracture. The Recommended Dietary Allowance of calcium for women over 19 is 800 milligrams per day—the amount of calcium in two cups of milk and one ounce of cheese.

Osteoporosis is eight times more common in women than men because women generally have thinner and less dense bones than men and because women live longer than men (osteoporosis is linked to the aging process). Pregnant and breastfeeding women have to supply the needs of their developing babies as well as their own bodies. Women also frequently eat less calcium rich foods.

What can you do to “bone” up on osteoporosis and help prevent its occurrence? Well, you can’t change your heredity, race, sex, age or the way your body functions. You can decrease some of the risks of developing osteoporosis if you: exercise regularly (exercise leads to denser and stronger bones); quit smoking; and check with your doctor to make sure medications you’re taking have no ill-effect on your bones.

You also can choose a calcium rich diet that includes low-fat (to cut calories) dairy products such as milk, cheese and yogurt. If you’re not fond of milk to drink maximize your calcium intake by adding extra cheese to salads or sandwiches, putting powdered milk to soups, hot cereals and casseroles and eat pudding or ice cream for dessert occasionally.

Unless recommended by your physician, get your calcium from dairy foods and other dietary sources rather than pills. In addition to other nutrients, dairy products contain lactose and vitamin D which help your body absorb calcium.

For extra calcium punch, try this vanilla shake recipe.
Vanilla Smoothie Shake with Extra Calcium
1 c. ice cubes
3 Tbls. light karo syrup
1 tsp. vanilla
1 c. skim milk
2 cups dry skim milk powder
1. Combine karo syrup, vanilla, skim milk powder in container of electric blender. Cover; whirl at high speed until thick and smooth, about one minute.
2. Add ice cubes, one at a time, until mixture is creamy and blends until smooth and frothy. Will make about 2 1/2 cups of shake and will provide approximately 402 milligrams of calcium. If no blender, use crushed ice and shake in a tightly covered quart jar or container.

Forestry officials disagree on job outlook

by Lee Bieloyzksi

Special to The Pointer

A University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point graduate has received recognition from an environmental-based organization for his research on rusty crayfish which are causing havoc in northern lakes.

Kent Van Horn of Minocqua and Park Forest, Ill., was cited by the Wisconsin Chapter of the American Water Resources Association at its annual meeting in St. Paul, Minn.

Other forestry officials are more reluctant to voice such optimism.

The job market is viewed as an area of concern within the forestry industry's job market in light of a world-wide economic recovery, decreased job competition and a stabilisation of forest service employment.

Leopold's legacy lives on

by Susan P. Lampert

Special to The Pointer

Noted as an intriguing philosopher, forestor, wildlife ecologist, and conservationist, Aldo Leopold's 100th anniversary is an occasion to celebrate how many Americans interested in our natural resources. Born in Burlington, Iowa, Leopold explored the wonders of the wild along the Mississippi River at the age of 16. Leopold had decided to become a forester and left for further schooling in the East.

While Leopold studied at Yale University from 1903 to 1905, the U.S. Forest Service was created and began providing jobs in the field. In 1907, Leopold joined the U.S. Forest Service. His first assignment was in the remote Apache Forest in Arizona. Leopold became a distinguished forester and later a professor of game management. His philosophy of wilderness grew as he grew acquiring the circle of the relationship of man and the land.

In a result of serious illness during 1913-1914, Leopold was unable to continue working in the field. He turned his efforts to wildlife conservation and recreation. His first article to mention the wilderness (1918), "The Popular Wilderness" was published in 1924. Leopold left the Southwest for a new position as associate director of the Forest Products Laboratory in Madison, Wisconsin. He continued to promote wilderness preservation, in addition to working as a consulting forester in several states. Leopold, one of the founders of the Wilderness Society, was one of the first Foresters in the United States.

Leopold's most noteworthy project was the preparation of a working plan for the preservation of the Grand Canyon. The management of the Canyon was administered by the U.S. Forest Service before those responsibilities were transferred to the Park Service in 1919.

This second re-employment program by the postwar push for roads in the Apache Territory to write, "The Grand Canyon Bill," a plea for preserving some wilderness areas with roadless terrain. In 1924, Leopold left the Southwest for a new position as assistant director of the Forest Products Laboratory in Madison, Wisconsin. He continued to promote wilderness preservation, in addition to working as a consulting forester in several states. Leopold, one of the founders of the Wilderness Society, was one of the first Foresters in the United States, known today as the Gila Wilderness Area within the Gila National Forest. In 1928 Leopold resigned from his position and started a university as management during this time he wrote, the first book in this field entitled, Game Management. The University of Wisconsin at Madison then created a new Department of Game Management which Leopold chaired. This was the first such program in the country.

Fishing action improves in state waters

There are several reports of good fishing action from around the state. In the northwest, wildfires are a concern in the Cumberland and Brule areas...please be careful with fire in the outdoors. Ice is off most lakes and going fast on the others. Crappies are hitting from the Flambeau River in the Park Falls area...lake ice there is not safe to walk on. In the Brule area, crappies are being landed by anglers on the Black River below Black River Falls. The ice is off the flowages in the Black River Falls area, and waterfowl are back in numbers. A few walleyes are being taken below the dam.

In the northeast, anglers took good catches of browns on the eastern shoreline of Door County last week, and a few rainbows were caught at the Kenawau nuclear power plant. Browns were hitting at the Point Beach power plant and along the Two Rivers shoreline in Manitowoc County. Nice size perch were caught in open water at Red Arrow Park in Marinette and off the Johnson Bridge in the Pentilgo Harbor Wildlife Area. Walleyes rewarded angler's efforts on the Menominee River at the Hadije Street dam, and walleyes were also biting on the Wolf River below the Shawano dam. Crappies were biting in the Wolf River in Waupaca County.

In the southeast, four to five-pound browns were landed at the Edgewater Power plant in Sheboygan County and by shore anglers in the Sheboygan harbor. Rainbows took spawn sacks at the Port Washington power plant in Ozaukee County. Lake Michigan fishing was generally slow off Milwaukee, Racine and Kenosha counties. On the inland waters of the southeast, crappies are hitting in the Fox River system in Racine County.

In the south and southwest, trout anglers are having success in Grant County and bluegills and crappies were being caught in the Mississippi River there. Walleye activity is picking up on the Wisconsin River in Sauk County with several fish in the eight-pound class taken over the past weekend. Running northern's and walleyes are biting on the Fox River west of Lake Puckaway, and the shoreline of Big Green Lake is yielding some crappies and bluegills.

RHINELANDER, WI — County, village, township and other units of municipal government officials are reminded that the April 15, 1987, application deadline for all-terrain vehicle (ATV) trail maintenance, acquisition, insurance and development projects is fast approaching.

DNR North Central District Community Services Specialist Glen Wiegman says the current budget proposes contains about $380,000 for trail aid in 1987-88. He adds that, “The highest priority for 1987-88 dollars will be the maintenance of existing trails, followed by requests for insurance, acquisition, and development of new trails or intensive use areas.”

Applications for the 1987-88 program will be reviewed by the state off-road vehicle advisory council in late July 1987. The off-road vehicle advisory council will decide at that time what projects will receive funding.

Additional information on this program may be obtained by contacting Mr. Wiegman at the North Central District Office in Rhinelander or by calling (715)363-7616.

Backyard wildlife

A program to acquaint householders with ways they can create backyard wildlife habitat will be held Saturday morning, April 11, at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

Naturalists for UWSP’s Schmeeckle Reserve will explain how the use of natural landscaping, such as planting of beneficial plants and providing of other needs of wildlife can attract birds and animals.

The session will be for one hour, beginning at 10 a.m. in the Schmeeckle Reserve Visitor Center near the corner of North Point Drive and Michigan Avenue.

The fee will be $1 for adults and 25 cents for children under age 12. Advance registration is required and may be arranged by phone on weekdays to 546-8992.

Conservation Congress hearings Apr. 27

MADISON, WI - Wisconsin citizens are encouraged to attend the annual conservation rules hearings to be conducted by the Department of Natural Resources this year at 7:30 p.m., Monday, April 27, in each of Wisconsin's 72 counties.

The hearings offer the public an opportunity to discuss and vote on fishing and hunting rules changes being considered by the department. Also, advisory questions from the department and the Wisconsin Conservation Congress will be discussed and voted on. In addition, persons attending the hearings may submit proposals for consideration relating to fishing and hunting regulations and natural resources management. DNR personnel will be on hand to answer questions.

The hearings also provide a forum for the election of delegates from each county to the Wisconsin Conservation Congress. The Congress, comprised of three delegates and two alternates from each county, serves as a citizen's advisory group to the Natural Resources Board. Eligible candidates include any adult resident of the county who is not employed by the Department of Natural Resources or a member of the Natural Resources Board.

Most of his ideas on philosophy of the wilderness are contained in his book, "A Sand County Almanac" which was not published until 1949. This environmental classic became Leopold's most notable work. The most famous of these essays contained in the book, "The Land Ethic," has become the manifesto of the modern American environmental movement. This is due, in part, because of the influence the book has had on wilderness advocates. It has become a text for those who seek to preserve the wilderness for the future generations.

Van Horn, from p. 12

This species reproduces rapidly, and while it takes care of a difficult problem of weed infestations in many lakes, scientists believe that it is not a solution for the loss of fish and other animal life, according to Van Horn.

There are chemicals that effectively kill the crayfish, but the treatment is not considered viable because it kills all other life in the lake. Consequently, there is no acceptable way to deal with the problem, Van Horn continued, which has lead one DNR official to call it worse than acid rain.

Complicating the matter is the fact the rusty crayfish populations increase at a phenomenal rate. To rid lakes of this species requires removal of everyone.

Van Horn is a 1982 graduate of Rich East High School in Park Forest.

Offensively on Saturday, the Pointers banged out 14 hits and stranded 17 base runners in two games. John Hinze, Chris Koh­nie, Chet Sergio and Paul Speth all had big hits. Kohnie and Speth each had one homerun and three RBIs apiece. “Hinze really had a nice weekend for us as a lead-off hitter,” said Handel. “He was on base 8-out-of-12 times.”

Defensively, the Pointers were below par in game one with two errors and one unearned run, but improved their play in game two. On Sunday, the Pointers swept a pair of games from Milwaukee, winning 5-1 and 8-7.

In game one, leisurely threw a one-hitter and struck out six in going the distance, going the distance, winning, 5-1 and, 8-7.

In game two, Sergio went the route in pitching a one-hitter and striking out nine runners in giving up three hits in going the distance. “Tom pitched a real nice game, he hung tough and got himself out of a couple of jams,” said Handel.

Offensively on Sunday, the Pointers pounded out 15 hits while stranding 14 runners on base in two games. Hinze, Hank Lyberg, Kohnie, Speth and Mike Riechel all had a good double header with Riechel hitting one homerun and adding four RBIs. “Our kids showed some good mental toughness, in tough conditions. We still have areas to improve on to become the ball club we would like to be.”

Injuries have been another problem for the Pointers. Greg Dantoin has been nagged by a wrench back and will be out for awhile. Scott Pompe and Jeff Spitzer have had minor injuries and appear to be coming around.

The Pointers will play a makeup game at Eau Claire on Thursday, April 8. They return home to host Oshkosh on Friday, April 10, before traveling to Whitewater on Saturday, April 11. Handel added. “Oshkosh and Whitewater will be a real good test to see where we are. Oshkosh is definitely the conference favorite and we will definitely have to play good baseball against them.”

All three games are double headers and are scheduled to start at 1 p.m.
Tracksters break rep at 'Cold man'

by Karen Kulinski

The weather was good and did not live up to its reputation at the 'Cold Man Invitational', said Pointer men's track coach Rick Witt.

And Keith Stoll, Jim Kickland and Arnie Schraeder were as hot as the weather as all won their events to pace the Pointers at the Colman Invitational on Saturday. (There were no team scores kept.)

"I thought the meet went very well since this was the first year we had the meet as a coed," said Witt. "This was the first time that the guys had competed in a month. We were a little rusty from the layoff and also a little tired from some of the toughest training of the season thus far."

"Even with this in mind, I felt that we had some excellent events."

Stoll captured his title in the high jump with a leap of 6-4 while Kickland topped the crew in the pole vault with a vault of 14 feet. By no surprise, Schraeder topped the pack in the 400 run with a clocking of 1:54.54.

"I was really pleased with the efforts of our field event people," said Witt. "Kickland has come back from a nasty fall at the conference meet to post a good win. Stoll is much more rustier from the layoff and also a little tired from some of the time that the guys had competed in a month. We were a little 14 feet. By no means the weather as all won their events to pace the Pointers the 'Cold Man Invitational', " said Pointer men's track coach Rick Witt.

Improvement from Jim Shunway and John Gunderson in the hammer and John Wright in the javelin pleased Witt.

With a majority of the men running in off events, the Pointers were still competitive. "I would have to say that our top athletes were Peter Larsen and Eric Fossum," said Witt.

With personal best clockings, Larsen placed second in the 100 dash with a time of 11.21 while Fossum, with a time of 23:28.4, finished second in the steeplechase.

"I was pleased with our sprinters who have been decimated with injuries and still continue to bounce back," said Witt. "Gerrick Williams, Tim Jahske and Joel Kiepeke are all picked up but Larsen and Hap Wolfgram have picked up the slack."

The hurdlers dominated the 400 hurdles as Derrick Bass took second (56.23), Brad Houtset third (54.41) and Ted Blanco sixth (58.09). Jim Seikel grabbed sixth in the 110 high hurdles in 15.30.

"Our hurdlers ran well for the first time outside," said Witt. "I feel Blanco, Bass, Seikel and Houtset will help us carry our great tradition. Our middle distance runners all ran off events and we were still able to place two-to-three people in each event. I also thought we showed some good depth in the mile relay with three teams in the top six."

The men's track team will run at the Northwestern Relays in Evanston, Ill., on April 10-11.

Volleyball

Club beats Stout

by Karen Kulinski

Sports Editor

In their final home stint of the season, the UW-Stevens Point men's volleyball club topped Stout by winning all three games last week.

The Pointers won by scores of 15-12, 15-10 and 15-7.

"Going into the match, my goals were to win the match in three games and also to give every club member a chance to play," said club leader Mark Thuerman. "We accomplished both of these goals so we couldn't be anything but pleased."

"Dave Woodford contributed a solid, all-around effort showing evidence of his all-conference abilities. Tom Koch got the chance to run the offense, filling in for a starter. He did a fine job proving that he's ready to take over that responsibility anytime off the bench this year and as a starter next year." "

Middle hitters Woodford and Cleary were the top spikers while Woodford also captured the top blocker honor. Thuerman and Woodford headed the spiking list.

Due to lack of players, the Pointers had to forfeit three games each to Bethel College and St. Thomas over the weekend. "The club has had problems assembling people for matches all season long," said Thuerman. "This past Saturday was the worst turn out as people had other commitments."

The Pointers travel to Iowa to take on Luther and St. Olaf on Sunday, April 12, before traveling to Carleton, MN, for the conference meet on April 15.

Lady Pointers drop pair to Titans

by Craig Roberts
Staff Writer

A pair of six-run first innings keyed the UW-Oshkosh Titans to 9-0 and 12-2 wins over the UW-Stevens Point women's softball team at the UW field Tuesday afternoon.

"We did some real good things," said Lady Pointer coach Nancy Page, "and then we just kind of put ourselves in a hole that we couldn't get out of."

After going scoreless in their four previous games, UWSP finally got on the board in the top of the first in game two as Denise Stark singled home Becky Lundberg who had led the game off with a walk. Lundberg drove in Stevens Point's other run in the second as she singled home Jill Melville who had walked and advanced on Karen Sarseth's sacrifice.

In the opener, Brenda VanderBurgt rapped out a pair of hits including a double.

"Oshkosh is a real veteran team," said Page. "Their team is made up almost entirely of juniors and seniors. I'm hoping that our players can learn from their mistakes. In both games, we had one bad inning that hurt us."

"I think that our hitting today was encouraging and that it was the first time we scored in five games was also positive. I think things will start coming." The Lady Pointers will begin a two-game road stint, taking on River Falls and La Crosse.

The young Stevens Point softball team made its home debut on Tuesday, but could not notch victories over a tough Oshkosh Titan team.

stopped just long enough for them to get off after Joel rushed from compartment to compartment throwing luggage out the windows.

Many of the buses were on strike, too (not much of a sur­prise by this time), but a bus company across the street from the train station was still run­ning, because each driver owned the bus he drove. Before board­ing the bus shortly after that night (it arrived late, which set our hearts aflutter), Nadia, Mark and I took bets on what would go wrong with the bus. Nothing happened, however, probably because we expected it, and we arrived in Athens at 5 a.m. on Friday. We had been enroute from Budapest to Athens for 55 hours; had arrived in Athens 39 hours after our scheduled arrival time; were sick, exhausted, hungry, dirty, smell and afraid of something else going wrong.

Did we have any good luck? Any good times? Did we ever laugh?

ty. This is pure tyranny. And the United States, always pointing out the hruman rights violations in the South Vietnamese, was sick of the American can­ political dogma; however, it unfortunately remains rather consistent with the current administration's policies.

The United States government has been sending billions of dol­ lars in aid for the maintenance of the state of Israel to insure a foothold of democracy in the Middle East. Yet, this type of unquestioned support has in the past led us into unhealthy client state relationships with coun­tries such as South Korea, Tai­wan and South Vietnam. One must remember that it was the questionable invasion of Leba­non by the Israelis that led to the slaughter of U.S. Marines there. The Israelis are also the ones who initiated the idea of arm's for hostages that led to the Iran/Contra fiasco that effectively has stiffened the Rea­ gan administration. The Israelis were also spying on the U.S. government through Jonathan Pollard, a case the Israeli gov­ernment has tried to sweep quietly under the rug and still has not taken full responsibility for.

Despite all this the United States government has been fit to give Israel the official title of ally and the political perks that go with this title. Again, the United States government has stunned the oppressed in favor of the elitist status quo, with lit­tle consideration of anything but the exploitive advantages. Long live: human rights!!

of Columbus and the 1965 U.S. intervention in the civil war in the Dominican Republic. A dramatization of one of them will be presented at the tele­vised ceremonies which will be taped for later broadcast on public television.

The professor plans to com­pile a collection of his stories for publication as a book.

widely published author, Lawlor's short stories have appeared in New Mexico Humani­ ties Review, Ball State University Forum and Wisconsin Academia Review. Last year, Ball State recognized him as one of its Outstanding Doc­ toral Graduates in English.

Lawlor's editorial columns have been published in New York Newsday and the Minne­apolis Star and his poetry and translation from Spanish have appeared in several small mag­azines. He taught for a year at Universidad Catolica Madre y Maestra in Santo Domingo and he serves as the designated translator for Carols Debai, for­mer ambassador to the Vatican from the Dominican Republic.

The professor is the new edi­tor of the quarterly newsletter for the Wisconsin Intellectual Freedom Coalition. A native of Hollis, N.Y., Law­lor came to UWSP in 1978 upon completing his doctorate at Ball State.

Reagan from p. 9

Let it be known, first of all, that literacy campaigns are nothing new. Panic over the Spokesman's findings was the same type of educational cam­paign 30 years ago. The sad fact is that the federal government is using scare tactics to promote volun­teerism, and it is only distasteful.

We can think of other illitera­cy scare stories that may be used to talk about our endan­gered national welfare, but our slackening ability in the eco­nomic marketplace. What does it mean to a nation of poor readers depends too much on slick political adver­tisements on television for mak­ing critical presidential voting decisions. This is frightening.

So maybe we can agree with what Reagan said back in 1983: "Adult illiteracy holds back too many of our citizens, and as a nation, we, too, pay a price."

One of the prices is a nation which should have questioned many of the motivations and hidden agendas behind Rea­gan's rhetoric a long time ago.

Now, Reagan is proposing cutbacks in the support of the public libraries. It makes us question even further what kind of a nation of readers it is that Reagan is envisioning.

Point, from p. 9

nei was at that time teaching adults how to use the books or software for the outreach pro­gram.

-St. Stanislaus Parish was also ready to teach adults to read, but they had no one to tu­to.

The military recruitment offi­ce here found that 20 percent of its applicants could not pass a literacy exam which required only 21 correct out of 9 ques­tions in order to pass.

-Oral Driver's License Con­sent also proved a real need for better literacy skills in the com­munity.

Dietrich has organized with representatives from Social Serv­ices, Stevens Point area schools, the city library, both the Jefferson and Portage Houses, St. Stanislaus, the busi­ness sector, other univer­sity professors to make the litera­cy initiative more effective in Stevens Point.

"The training program, Por­rage County Literacy Council, uses a learning system struc­tured on Taubach Literacy In­ternational. It has been used since the 1950s. Ray Wagner, a retired math teacher, brought his expertise on the Taubach program to our first tutorial workshop. We also have a part­time counselor named Ray La Belle," Dietrich said.

"The important thing now is that we can't just do this as a for­help," Dietrich said. Obviously all would agree that it is in the in­terest of adults to have either the ambition or the courage to admit their need and help. But Dietrich has called their efforts commendable. "We have 16 students so far from different types of situations—all who want to improve their lives."

Any student here at UWSP who would like to volunteer his or her time and enlighten the life of another adult should see Dan Dietrich in the Academic Achievement Center in the LRC.

AFRICAN DISCOVERIES?

NUCLEAR WASTE STORED TWO BILLION YEARS.

In 1972 French scientists working in tropical Africa discovered a site where nuclear waste had been safely contained for an estimated two billion years. Remarkably, the naturally created waste did not make the region's ground water undrinkable. Instead, natural processes held the waste - thousands of pounds of it - in the rocks where the waste was buried.

Where did this ancient nuclear waste come from? It was created below ground when a uranium ore body began operating just like the core of a modern nuclear reactor. The ore was water-soaked and hot. Even with such harsh conditions, the rocks worked - they held the waste at that site. Plutonium-239, a radioactive substance with a 2.45 million-year half-life, did not budger. Some other radioelements of the "fission product" class did migrate, but less than 300 feet through the rocks. Natural processes halted movement, allowing scientists today to study the remnants of ancient geological "disposal".

Methods of incarceration

By Bernie Bleske

"So," my mother was saying to me. "What are you going to do with your life?" This was a statement, not a question. Mothers can do that.

"Uh," I said, avoiding eyes.

There are two choices in situations like this. Tell the truth, i.e. "I haven't a hairbrained notion in hell, but I'd like to go to Key West and stagnate," or lie.

I made a mistake.

"I'm not sure, but I'd like to go to Key West for awhile," I said.

"To live!"

"To live."

Here's what she did: She drummed her fingers very slowly on the formica kitchen table. They made a slowly ominous nuk nuk nuk nuk. The dog, being smarter than I, wet it melts Tupperware.

They didn't believe this.

I brought out a Key West paper and proved it.

Dad looked at the rent section. So did mom.

"Five-hundred dollars a month to share an apartment?" she screamed.

I'm going to buy a boat and live on it," I said.

Dad just looked at me, one of those 'you are an amazingly dumb person' looks on his face.

"Dear菊, I want you to be prepared for all this."

I was, as much as one can be, prepared for this. But I'm a tourist town," I said. "There are lots of jobs."

"Like what?"

"Everything."

They didn't believe this. Parents are, for a genetic or social reason some professor probably has a theory about, naturally inclined to make their children unhappy.

It often isn't their fault. Gosh, they just love their kids and, well, what's better than a parent's love?

"She wet the carpet," (the dog looking at the dog. There are two choices in situations like this. Tell the truth, i.e. "I haven't a hairbrained notion in hell, but I'd like to go to Key West and stagnate," or lie.

She shook her head.

"You'll never be anything."

This is a continual parental wish. Be someone. I suggested going schizophrenic and being a number of people. Just call me Sybil Bleske," I told them.

Dad gave me that look.

Being someone means making loads of money. It means owning a VCR, power drill, Sears self-propelled lawn mower, a set of Corell dinner-ware, and a soft toilet seat. It means never shopping at K-Mart.

"How about if I write books and be someone," I asked.

"Writers are weird," my mother said. "I want you to be normal." "Fat chance," said dad. "You won't make it in Key West," he said.

Actually, parents are very insidious. They mention things like health insurance, car insurance, boat insurance, interest, sudden diseases, loose women, starvation, poverty, drugs, lack of television, car problems, hard toilet seats and failure. None of this is relevant.

"What's that smell?" I said, looking at the dog. There are cases, certainly, when a dog is a man's best friend. This was one of them, since it was clearly a time to change the subject.

"She wet the carpet," (the dog - not my mother) I said.

"I'm not going to clean it up," dad said.

Here was a chance to redeem myself. If you can clean dog wee, you can do anything.

Now to convince them of that.

In the local news

Yesterday, Chancellor Marshall proclaimed that he would not, under any circumstances, allow cats in his home. "And so," he stated to several be- reaved incoming freshmen, "there will no longer be big-ased cookies at the Corner Market." His wife supported him by crying loudly "Rutabaga! Rutabaga!"

"Is there no end to this silliness?" asked one student, to which the Chancellor responded "My God, the Dutch Elms are coming."

Earlier that day, several nude seniors were spotted parading past Belts in an apparent attempt to shock old ladies. The attempt was apparently futile. Said one ninety year old, "That's the best thing I've seen since Henry died, bless his soul." She then proceeded to pummel newly elected Stevens Point mayor, Scott Schultz, about the head and face with her walker. Schultz escaped apparently unharmed, say witnesses, though he was later spotted in Shop-Ko attempting to roto-till the lingerie department. SGA president Lisa Thiel has said that, should Schultz be injured in any way, she would take him "under her wing until the poor boy gets better."

And in other local news, former Pointer basketball star and Rhode Scholar, Terry Porter, returned to his old playing grounds for what he wistfully called "an homage to my former self." Porter then proceeded to recite several poems he had written after leaving Point to pursue his career in his first love, basketball. One of the works, "Ode to my jock-strap," received a standing ovation from the Women's badminton team, who had gathered in Quandt earlier to practice volleys. "That one, right here," sighted one player. "The line 'Oh strengthen me, elastic cup of integrity', left a lump in my throat."

The Women's Badminton gents accepted no reported to Student Conduct for an alleged incident. The Green Bay Packers later that month. "It's an attempt," says head-coach Missy Berkems, "to familiarize the Packers with the finer points of women. We're hoping to get some strong relationships going here."

When asked what she meant by that statement, Missy replied "I haven't the foggiest."

A national report on Education was released earlier this week. To few person's surprise the report concluded with "We have found no discernable reason for most college students to remain in school other than that their parents tell them to."

Said the Chancellor in reply: "Bunk! It's all bunk. This is a good school I tell you. We have an outstanding computer literacy program. Yeah, that's it. An outstanding computer literacy program. Financed by... AT&T. Yeah. AT&T."

The report, conducted by several middle-aged aluminum siding salesman in Des Moines, made several suggestions for the overall improvement of our education system. Most of these suggestions, however, were rejected because they were too reasonable. The Board of Regents accepted only one suggestion: to purchase several million dollars worth of style 3 Maus-grey with special overlapping weather-beater glaze, aluminum siding. "It's going to cost the students," said the regents, "but that's never bothered us before. We all must pay for quality education."

After checking out last week's edition of the Pointer, Governor Tommy Thompson had some harsh words of criticism for the staff. "I really expected more out of you," he said. Despite vows from the dejected staff to be really good, Thompson refused to pose for a picture with Pointer editors.

Yoga classes were banned at UWSP Friday when Kevin Block dislocated his shoulder and hip while in P.E. 110 - Advanced Yoga.

According to a Campus Security report, Block was practicing the hamstring stretch when he felt his shoulder and hip pop out of socket. Officials shortened plans to move him to the Health Center after discovering that it closed at 4:00 p.m. Instead, they planned to take him there on Monday.

However, when officials, together with campus security, returned to Block Monday morning, they found that his joints had settled in the location shown here. He is currently sitting on a mat in Quandt Fieldhouse.

Officials did tell the Pointer that if Block was not out of Quandt by Friday he would be reported to Student Conduct for possible disciplinary action.

"It's not really that bad in here," Block said yesterday, "but sometimes - like when the baseball team practices in here - I just wish I were someplace else.

Kevin Block is a 24-year-old junior majoring in Forestry. Physical Education staff members said that the Yoga classes were cancelled for the fear that, "Other students might start trying the hamstring stretch. Students are generally asthmatic and who knows what might happen if people see what Kevin is doing."
