Kunze and Moe grab top spots in student government elections

966 students cast their ballots for SGA student body elections on Tuesday and Wednesday and voted David Kunze and Angela Moe SGA President and Vice President.

"I am extremely pleased because this is the best voter turnout in the past four years I have been here," said Tami Butts, SGA president. Voter turnout eclipsed last year's weak showing by bringing 11.4% of the eligible voters to the polls. Last year only 8.8% of the eligible voters voted.

"Because of this increase, the representatives will have more credibility," Butts commented.

Kunze and Moe collected a total of 489 votes which broke down in this manner: College of Letters and Science... 227 votes

College of Professional Studies... 78 votes

College of Natural Resources... 46 votes
College of Fine Arts and Comm... 138 votes

"We are very excited for next year and would like to thank everyone who helped out with the campaign," said Kunze.

Candidates Randy Soquet and Chris Grassl were in second gathering 226 votes and Tim Walsh, who campaigned without a running mate took 123 votes.

Senators were also elected for their respective colleges. In the College of Letters and Science there were 15 seats available and nine were filled.

Brady Kiel (230 votes), Au How Wai (228), Seiko Katayama (224), Laura Lepak (215), Jeff Ledger (213), Heidi Sunnicht (208), Douglas Cole (201), Jodi Reddington (192), and Duane Breunig (184).

In the College of Fine Arts and Communication there were five seats available and two were filled.

Dawn Omernick collected 143 votes and Steve Lardinois took 131 of the votes.

In the College of Natural Resources there were six seats available and three were filled. Natalie Foxx received 91 votes, Jeremy Higgins collected 86 votes and Steve Young also took 86 of the votes.

There were four seats available in the College of Professional Studies but there were no senators elected.

"I feel the elections ran very smoothly and I would like to thank all candidates for demonstrating their interest in student issues," said SGA elections Coordinator Robin Von-Haden.

Student Bill of Rights an issue for Hirsch

by Barry Radler

Contributor

Student Regent David Hirsch paid a visit to the Stevens Point campus Thursday night and addressed the student Senate.

Hirsch defined his constituency as consisting equally of students and regents. Appointed by the governor, Hirsch said he has a responsibility to students, faculty and staff as well as to the system of the University of Wisconsin.

Hirsch fielded questions from the Senate and gallery on an array of topics ranging from the now-defunct tuition freeze resolution to the system-wide Student Bill of Rights now being formulated.

Hirsch voted against the tuition freeze bill justifying his actions by saying "it doesn't do anything for the quality of education students receive."

He added, however, that there is a limit on the tuition that students are charged, and that the state legislature doesn't have a grasp on what that figure is.

On the Student Bill of Rights, Hirsch was drilled by Student Government Senator Paul Easton on the justness of the current policy which requires students to live in the dormitories for at least two years. On the controversial topic of revealing teachers' evaluations to students, Hirsch agreed that there should be some sort of disclosure.

Explaining why there have been so many delays in ratifying the Bill of Rights, Hirsch said that some of the original amendments conflicted with statutes already on the books in the UW system, but conceded that students do need such a document.

Hirsch offered one avenue for quick change of UW policies--"vote." He cited students' voting record as abysmal and

Clinton rallies "grass-root" support in Stevens Point

Editor-in-Chief

"This is an election which will shape the future of a generation," said presidential candidate Bill Clinton.

"It's not even about republicans and democrats," he told a crowd of about 200 during a visit to Stevens Point last week. "It's about whether we're going to have a national economic strategy like all the other rich countries; whether we're going to be a real education nation."

"What's really at stake is what the children here tonight will grow up to live in, whether you can make a decent living, and whether we're going to compete with other countries in the world for a high-wage, high-growth, high opportunity future. In the end, this is what matters."

Clinton, who spoke at the American Legion in downtown Stevens Point last Friday evening to a group that he called "a great group of grass-roots americans," addressed issues of education, health care, taxes, and the recession, and touched briefly on environmental issues.

"This election is about whether we're going to have a country that continues arrogantly to believe that we can go into the world without government controlled health care costs," he said, "whether we're going to have a national environmental and energy policy designed to liberate us from our dependence on foreign oil and give us a chance to invest in our country, protecting our environment, and building our economy."

Clinton said there's been a poverty explosion in America, because the poor can't work their way into the middle class.

"Wages went down, the work week got longer, our competitive position eroded," he summarized. "People are hurting in this country. They can't pay their bills, every year is tougher than the year before. People are afraid their children are going to grow up and have a life worse than they had."

Clinton, who last visited Stevens Point in 1987, blames current republican administration for the country's present recessive position. "The whole idea of America has always been fairness, and progress, and freedom, and community," said Clinton.

"This administration has savaged all these ideas, because we have stubbornly refused to do what it takes to compete and win."

In addition to his explanation of the source of american problems, Clinton offered potential solutions, "I want to offer a new economic policy based on old fashioned american ideas. One that puts our people first instead of our money, so we can compete."

Clinton made promises to aid the education system and work for the middleclass. "This is a middle class country. All the middle class has gotten is the shaft for ten years. I'm going to turn that around if you elect me president," he said.

Clinton also claimed that americans need leadership and a strong sense of community. "I

IN THE REAL WORLD

Tensions are flaring in "The Real World" this week. Peru President Alberto Fujimori declared a "state of emergency" Monday and suspended all constitutional rights.

Fujimori defended his actions by saying legislative and judicial opponents were undermining his efforts to raise Peru out of its deep recession and to combat a 12-year guerrilla uprising that has recently grown more intense.

The U.S. called the state of emergency cry by Fujimori "regrettable" and suspended the $45 million of the $237 million in 1991 military and economic aid that has yet to be sent to Peru.

Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat was nearly lost Tuesday when the jet that was carrying him from Sudan to Libya disappeared in a sandstorm.

Sources say that communication between Arafat's jet and Libya was lost just minutes before it was scheduled to land.

Libyan officials confirmed that a heavy sandstorm had swept the area and that the jet had to make an emergency landing.

After an extensive seven hour search for the jet, officials say they found the chairman alive and well.

"Signs, signs; everywhere there's signs..." Lyrics that were brought back to the top of the rock charts recently ring true for Wisconsin drivers.

Federal officials ordered Wisconsin to remove almost 20 percent of the billboards that line the thousands of miles of highways that run thru Wisconsin.

The federal order has given Wisconsin until December of 1993 to remove the unwanted signs. The Department of Transportation has given a June deadline as to when they will propose a plan for the federal government to buy and remove the signs.

The way things are shaping up now, it looks as if the DOT will be appraising each sign that must come down in order to fairly compensate owners for their property.

Tsongas has strong run in Wisconsin Norquist wins; McGee loses

by Chris Stebnitz
News Editor

Former Democratic Presidential candidate Paul Tsongas found a way to grab 22% of the Wisconsin votes from Bill Clinton and Jerry Brown.

Tsongas, who announced he was dropping out of the presidential race three weeks ago, had announced earlier this week that he would consider re-entering the race if he received 20% or more of the votes in Wisconsin, Kansas and New York.

With Clinton salvaging a surprisingly low 38% of the votes and Jerry Brown getting 35%, Tsongas has said that he needs to find out "more information" about what the new surge of support means to his campaign before he re-enters the race.

The Wisconsin primary broke down in this fashion:

Democratic votes:
Bill Clinton . . . 118,414
Jerry Brown . . . 111,006
Paul Tsongas . . . 68,512
Uncommitted . . . 6,289

Republican votes:
George Bush . . . 133,407
Patrick Buchanan . 28,415
David Duke . . . 4,937
Uncommitted . . . 3,235

In other voting Tuesday, Milwaukee Mayor John Norquist will be in office for another four year term after defeating mayoral candidate Gregory Graz and taking 63% of the Milwaukee votes.

Milwaukee's outspoken 10th district Alderman Michael McGee was defeated by newcomer Police Sgt. George C. Butler after Butler took 56% of the votes. McGee is leaving an office where he has spent the last eight years issuing threats of violence against the Milwaukee community.

In January, McGee threatened to launch guerrilla warfare with his Black Panther Militia if voters did not re-elect him to office.

McGee has blamed whites in power for his defeat. "I said when the district was redrawn that white people had enough veto power, just like in South Africa," McGee said.

Milwaukee's redistricting program that was approved last fall changed the makeup of McGee's district and brought in 60% new voters.

Registration computer system tripped up by leap year

About 20 percent of UWSP students will find conflicts between their class schedule and their registration appointment times.

UWSP Registrar Dave Eckholm announced this week that due to unforeseen computer problems, some students' registration times directly conflict with scheduled classes.

According to Eckholm, the system that was created to handle the registration appointments wasn't adjusted to account for leap year. The oversight has led to some confusion in the Records and Registration office during the past week.

"We do not want students to miss class in order to register."
-Registrar David Eckholm

"We have corrected the problem so that it will not be repeated in 1996," said Eckholm. Students are advised to contact Records and Registration if their registration time conflicts with a class time.

"We do not want students to miss class in order to register," said Eckholm.

Students are being asked to check their registration times and notify Records and Registration as soon as possible if there are any problems.

Allen applauds student employment

by Eric Meyer
Copy Editor

Work place experience and good communication skills top the list of traits personnel directors value most in college graduates, a nationally recognized speaker and UWSP professor told students Monday.

C.Y. Allen, professor of communication, spoke on the theme of "Student Earning and Learning, Preparation for Life in the Real World," as part of a five day celebration of National Student Employment Week opened April 6-10.

Allen cited a survey of 175 personnel directors which showed that references, school grades and extracurricular involvement were not as important to them as students holding a meaningful job while in school and mastering written and oral communication skills.

"I get out across a period of time to a lot of different arenas," said Allen. "What people say is that education is terribly fragmented and that we are too individualistic in our expectations."

"The idea of putting things together in some kind of a synthesized whole program for a human being—we don't do that very well," said Allen. "Out in the work place the world isn't divided up in the ways that our curriculum are training us," he told students.

"What they (industry) say about us is that we do not provide enough formal experience that requires people to put together their knowledge in some way that they can apply it and test it."

"I think that's why co-op programs, internship programs and student employment opportunities are so critical," said Allen.

Allen said employment offers students an opportunity to bolster their practical knowledge and build personality characteristics that are attractive to employers.

"We are experiencing the greatest pace and scope of change that any human beings and any organizational environments have ever had to absorb.

Employers are looking for leaders who can manage change effectively," he said, adding that good leaders don't give up even when change becomes uncomfortable.

"They're looking for someone with intentionality and commitment," said Allen.

"The best thing in the world to say about yourself is 'I have learned to manage my commitments and I bring intentionality and focus to what I do, and I can do that for you and this organization,'" said Allen.

"Talent is cheap. Dedication is costly," he concluded.

Legal drinking age controversy resurfaces Drunk driving raises issue of collective responsibility

by Mark M. Rogacki
Contributor

There has been extensive debate recently regarding increased penalties for drunk driving, as well as what blood-alcohol percentage level constitutes intoxication. The matter has garnered considerable press. Suffice it to say that we share a concern for keeping the roads safe for our family and our friends.

We also share an interest in preventing any senseless loss of life at the hands of intoxicated drivers, who are often times repeat offenders. But despite these common interests, the fact of the matter is that the time has come to scrap the 21-year-old drinking law, in favor of a uniform 19-year-old drinking age.

To this day, some continue to argue that when it comes to drinking and driving, it's the 19- and 20-year-olds who are the sole violators. The facts will show, however, that the actual high-risk group extends up to and slightly beyond the age of 26.

Politically, however, we all know it is impossible to make outlaws of all adults under the age of 26. That action would draw a significant backlash at the polls for those in Congress eager to find easy special interest support votes and for those organizations who are single-issue dependent. So, it was quite simply to forget this small adults are drinking? Unfortunately, the law now forces them to do so in their cars, at home or at parties.

Away from supervision, behind the wheel, at penalty of substantial fines and/or forfeitures, ready to flee the police. It is this "accident waiting to happen" that we should fear the most.

community even seems to place less of a priority on arresting persons for possession and use of dangerous illegal street drugs than it does to bringing its limited police resources to bear on the beer and beach party scene. Talk about sending mixed signals.

The problem of drinking and driving exists in our society as a whole. Segregating one part of our adult population and labeling them the problem, rather than acknowledging our collective responsibility and seeking a reasonable outcome, has proven itself to be punitive, costly and ineffective.

Freedom implies responsibility. We've told our children that for years. Now it's time to make those words reality by restoring the rights of our young adults through enactment of a uniform 19-year-old drinking age.

"We must continue to change behavior through education. This is the only way we are going to bring about real change."

group of young adults.

Further, it's clear that during recent years, our country has done an admirable job of heightening the public's awareness to the consequences of drinking and driving. We must continue to change behavior through education. This is the only way we are going to bring about real change.

Legally prohibiting 19- and 20-year-olds from drinking will continue to do little to address the problem of drunk driving. Who hasn't figured out yet that these 19- and 20-year old

Our country's legal adults deserve to have their rights restored. Currently, they can: be elected to the Legislature; serve in local government; vote; serve in the military; get married; declare bankruptcy; incur debt; purchase property; go to college; raise a family; refuse medical care; and participate in every other facet of adult decision making.

Yet we prohibit them from having a glass of wine or beer? Our law enforcement com-

Sociology project advocates fourth avenue safety

We believe that there is a pedestrian traffic problem on Fourth Avenue during school hours.

There are too many people crossing Fourth Avenue to have the posted speed at 25 mph as currently marked, and the present cross walk area is not wide enough or properly located.

As a part of a community organization project for a sociology course on campus, we have developed a survey to get the opinions of the student body on this Fourth Avenue issue.

We have also made a petition to the City of Stevens Point available for signing. The petition reads:

"We the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point students recommend the City of Stevens Point put up a 15 mile per hour speed limit sign and flashing yellow light on Fourth Avenue. We recommend that wide cross walk be placed on Fourth Avenue across from the walkway entrance between the Quandt Gym and the indoor track and pool.

The cross walk that does exist on the street is placed badly thus is hardly used. We suggest that this flashing yellow light occur from the hours of 8 AM to 5 PM on the stretch between Isador Street and Reserve Street. By doing this, the chances that pedestrians would get injured by crossing it would greatly decrease."

If any student or faculty who has not already signed this petition is interested in doing so, the petition will be available at the UC-Concourse on April 8th, 9th, and 10th.

Fourth Avenue Petition Project would like to thank those who have taken the time to complete our survey and return it to us, and to also thank those who have already signed the petition.

UWSP misses chance to host candidates Public Affairs Council points finger

Dear Editor:
In the April 2 issue of "The Pointer," Robert Heller, in a Letter to the Editor, stated that UWSP did not attempt to secure a presidential candidate to speak at the University. Mr. Heller is very uninformed.

Actually, the Public Affairs Council was in contact with each of the candidates, and the two who did come to Stevens Point chose invitations to speak off campus.

Former Governor Brown's Wisconsin campaign staff agreed to have him on campus. Mary Thurmaier, President of the Stevens Point Public School Board informed the Brown campaign that UWSP was willing to have the presentation at the high school.

At a School Board Meeting she informed the rest of the Board that she went "over the head" of the advisor to get UWSP's agreement. This isn't true. UWSP and the Public Affairs Council never agreed to this, nor was Public Affairs asked to be involved in planning Brown's presentation.

Governor Clinton's Wisconsin campaign director stated that he wanted the Governor to come to the University. Berg Gym had been reserved for the Governor on April 3, the date that he chose to come to Stevens Point. He too chose an alternate speaking location.

Republican candidates President Bush and Mr. Buchanan were extended invitations. Neither chose to come to Stevens Point.

In the past, the Public Affairs Council and its advisor, Ed Miller of the Political Science Department, have been very successful in getting candidates to UWSP.

The fact that the New York primary is now on the same day as Wisconsin cuts the candidates' publicity time in half.

That two of them spoke in Point but not at the University was the choice of the candidates' staffs, and not indicative of a lack of effort by the Public Affairs Council of the University.

Mr. Heller's concern about political discussions on campus is very well taken. But before he criticizes an action or interaction, he should get his facts straight.

Signing to fulfill language requirement

Dear Editor:
Just as Spanish and German are foreign languages, so is American Sign Language. So why does our university deny its bachelor of arts students the right to use the study of ASL to complete their foreign language requirement?

Sign languages are fully developed languages; and those who know sign language are capable of creating and comprehending unlimited numbers of new sentences, just like speakers of spoken languages.

ASL has its own morphological, syntactic, and semantic systems that parallel any of the spoken foreign languages taught on this campus. The acquisition of ASL does not involve simple imitation any more than Spanish could be acquired by imitation.

Yet, despite these similarities, ASL is not an option when choosing a foreign language.

Students should have the right to choose to study this complex and beautiful language. The odds of a student (or anyone for that matter), encountering someone who speaks ASL during the course of their life, is much greater than running into a person who speaks Chinese or Russian (both of which fulfill the foreign language requirement).

Because of UWSP's exceptional communicative disorders program, lack of knowledgeable faculty is not a factor. In fact, Professor Robert Balas is currently teaching the basic manual communication course this semester (open only to communicative disorders majors).

I believe all UWSP students (not just communicative disorders majors), have the right to choose to study ASL, and to have that study fulfill their foreign language requirement. Given the universal aspects of sign and spoken language I see no reason to deny us this right.

Casey Cieszynski

Prof evaluations a must

Dear Editor:
Do you ever wonder what happens to those teacher evaluations we fill out so diligently at the end of each semester? Well so do a lot of UWSP students, myself included.

I believe that as a consumer of education, I should have a right to see the student reviews of each teacher that I would consider taking a class from. By finding out opinions of fellow students I think I could improve the quality of my education by selecting the professor best suited to my personal needs of each class.

What is meant by needs, are the teaching style of the professor, from all book readings or all note taking, the attendance policy, and most of all the teacher's ability to convey thoughts and ideas effectively to the students.

By having access to the student evaluations, students could find out if a professor grades on percentages or on a curve. They might also avoid those teachers with the attitude of "I do not believe in giving A's (English 101) because if you deserved an A your should have tested out of this class."

If students can be warned about teachers like this it would benefit their grade point and also lower the number of hassles with drop-add at the start of each semester.

It seems strange and unfair that we may pay more for our education than a new car, yet almost blindly choose professors to teach us while we demand research and facts to choose the best automobile for our personal needs.

Local restaurant loses out on fish fry rating

Dear Editor:
As a 1972 UWSP graduate and past "Pointer" sports editor (1971-72), I occasionally read your fine newspaper and have considered writing an open letter if a situation ever warranted one. Well, I now feel that I must take a pen in hand.

In your April 2 edition, the Pointer's trio of writers Drea Page, Becca Dehn, and Patrick Bacher came up with a great idea by rating several of the local kitchens and restaurants as to the quality of Friday night fish fries. It must've been a labor of love.

Frankly, the people of Stevens Point are spoiled when it comes to fine eating, since this area has several outstanding places where one can go to get quality fish fries.

I agree with your writers when they said that high marks for fish fries should go to the Unique Bar & Restaurant, The Thirsty Whale, and The American Legion. All of those places put out some outstanding fish.

However, I'm somewhat shocked that they failed to mention the Number One Fish Fry establishment in town...namely Frank & Ernie's on the north side of Point.

Perhaps the omission was due to the fact that Frank's only added the kitchen last summer and are something like the new kid on the block in the cuisine department.

On the other hand, F & E's has already built up a strong clientele mainly by word of mouth, and many of their customers are college students - in particular athletes.

For a firsthand opinion, you can take it from me that F & E's is first rate on the kitchen front. Their fish fries are tremendous. Almost everyone who goes there for one is, and please pardon the pun, "hooked" on the place and goes back for more. It's such a neat set-up.

In closing, Frank & Ernie's fish fries are great, the prices are cheap, and the service is outstanding. Eat it there, or take it to go. You're a winner either way.

'Cold Man' starts outdoor track season Women place first, men third

by Mike McGill
Sports Writer

The 1992 Cold Man Invitational was hosted by the UWSP Men's and Women's track teams and the Stevens Point Track Club at Coleman Field on Saturday April 4.

The Women's squad placed first, while the men finished third.

The Women's Division of the Stevens Point Track Club ended up fifth, the Men's Division sixth.

Men's Coach Rick Witt was overall enthusiastic about the team's work.

"We basically let people do their own thing for this meet due to the big layoff-there wasn't a lot of emphasis on this meet. I thought we did extremely well in hurdles, the hammer throw and the 100M where all of our top finishers qualified for Nationals."

"I was also pleased with the progress of a couple of our young guys, Tom Wilson and Mike Dix, who both had good meets." Women's Coach Len Hill was unavailable for comment.

In men's individual events, UWSP team member Scott Halvorsen captured first place in the hammer throw (52.97M), Dean Bryan paced the 100M (1:0.81), and the 200M (2:2.24).

Adam Larson leaped to the top in the high jump (1.97M), Chad Robran won the 400M hurdles (:55.5), and Mike Cummings took first place in the pole vault (4.45M).

Other top finishers in men's competition were Mike Dix in the hammer throw (37.62M--fourth place), Jeff Constable in the 800M (2:03.4--sixth place), Joe Butler in the high jump (1.87M--fourth place) and Andy Valla in the men's 400M (:52.3--third place).

UWSP placed three of the top six hurdlers in the 110M event in Chris Larsen (:15.29--second place), Lyon Smith (:15.95--fifth place) and Parker Hanson (:15.96-- sixth place).

In the javelin throw, Tom Wilson finished third with 45.45M while Mike Woyak ended up sixth with 43.03M.

Helping out Robran in the 400M hurdles were Dave Woyak (:56.9-- third place) and Brian Ratkowski (1:01.2--sixth place).

UWSP's 4 X 400M relay ran to first place honors with a time of 3:25.8. Finishing strong for the Stevens Point Track Club in men's events were Arnie Schrader and Matt Hamilton in the 1500M. Schrader finished first with 4:05.0, directly followed by Hamilton with 4:05.7. Finishing strong in the 300M steeplechase was Rick Olson (9:50.1--third place). Schrader also took third in the 800M with a time of 2:02.0.

In women's events, the UWSP track team fared very well. Jenny Woyak took first in the triple jump with 9.75M.

Aimee Knitter led the 3000M with 10:50.9, and Tina Jarr placed first in the 1500M with a time of 5:15.0.

First place finishes were also recorded by Julie Greco in the 100M (:13.00) and the 400 hurdles (1:12.5), and Renee Davidson in the long jump (4.61M).

Other top placers included Laura Kraetsch in the triple jump (9.59M--second place), Lisa Wnuk (:16.8--second place) and Lyn Pitrof (:17.2--third place) in the 100M hurdles, Deb Hartz in the 3000M (12:04.6--third place), Amy Voigt in the 400M (1:01.7-- second place) and the 200M (:28.15--second place), Bee Jan Quah in the 100M (:13.72--third place) and Woyak in the 400M hurdles (1:14.2--fourth place).

Marnie Sullivan took second in the 800M with a time of 2:27.9. UWSP had three of the top six placers in the shot put in Laurie Helling (11.09M--second place), Bonnie Holl (11.09M--third place), and Lisa Jalowitz (9.24M--sixth place).

Helling and Jalowitz also placed in the top in the javelin event, with Helling earning second place (28.93M) and Jalowitz third place (25.81). Wnuk took second in the long jump (behind teammate Davidson) with 4.59M.

Pitrof (4.58M--third place) and Carrie Borys (4.03--fourth place) also placed. Holl (35.71M--second place),

Pointers sweep Lakeland College

by Mark Gillette
Sports Editor

After a long layoff, the Pointer men's baseball team returned to action Tuesday and manhandled Lakeland College, sweeping their doubleheader 15-0 and 10-0.

The highlight of the first game was a combined five inning no-hitter by Rob Wolff, Chris Combs, and Kory Krueger. Combs got the victory and improved his record to 2-1.

The Pointers brought their bats to the game, Rick Wagner slugged two homeruns and Dave Schuett and Russ Belling added one homer apiece.

Pointer Coach Guy Otte used the game as a chance for his pitchers to get some much-needed quality innings.

"It was important for our pitchers to get innings. We used six pitchers in both games," said Otte.

In the fourth inning of the first game UWSP burst for 11 runs against rattled Lakeland pitchers.

At the end of the fifth inning the Pointers went up 15-0. With the 10-run rule in effect, the second game began soon after, with the Pointers picking up right where they left off.

The Pointers took a 2-0 lead in the top of the first inning in the second game and never looked back. Pointer pitchers Travis Rosenbaum, Scott Soderberg and Bryan Quinell worked together for the 10-0 shutout. The pitchers gave up only four hits in six innings with Soderberg getting the victory.

Leadoff hitter Jay Krcmar led the way for the Pointers with a home run and two stolen bases. Point's 10 runs were manufactured from eight hits and four Lakeland errors.

With 23 hits and 25 runs in the two games, the Pointers hitting seems to be coming around. Coach Otte confirmed that.

"We knew our hitting would be solid this year, we just weren't sure if it would come around this

Hockey players gain more honors

Five players from UWSP's hockey team head up this year's 13 man Academic All-Northern Collegiate Hockey Association team.

Frank Cirone, Monte Conrad, Sean Marsan, Grant McDonald and Todd Tretter were the five players from this year's 25-7-4 Pointer squad who were represented on the academic team.

Cirone, a sophomore forward from Scarborough, Ontario, has a 3.42 cumulative grade point average (GPA) and is a business administration major.

Conrad, a senior defensive man from Madison, Wisconsin, had a 3.20 GPA and is a computer information major.

Junior forward Todd Tretter from St. Paul, Minnesota had garnered a 3.01 GPA in his physical education major. Both Conrad and Tretter represented the Pointers on the all-NCHA and all-WCUSU team as well.

Marsan, a junior forward from Medford, Massachusetts has a 3.46 GPA.

McDonald, a junior defensive man from Cowichan, British Columbia is a managerial accounting major with a 3.62 GPA.

McDonald had the second-highest GPA on the all-NCHA academic team. Only Jim Kerner of Bemidji State had a higher one (3.83).

Both McDonald and Conrad were named to the team for the second straight year.

All players named to the team had to have a cumulative GPA of 3.0 based on completing at least 50 semester or 75 quarter hours, and be recommended by his head coach.

Superior had the next most players on the team with three, Bemidji had two, and Eau Claire, River Falls, and Mankato State each had one player.

Brett Klowsowski, Dan Laughlin, and Glen Lang represented the Yellowjackets; Kerner and Dan Follenfson the Beavers; Mark Richter, Eau Claire; Chris Ratzloff, River Falls; and Paul Certzen, Mankato State.

University's city league team a dream Sports Specialties go 9-1 under Moe

by Mark Gillette
Sports Editor

Sports Specialties is their name. Basketball is their game.

This dream team made up of UWSP students and faculty compiled a 9-1 season record in the Stevens Point city basketball league.

Its coach, Jim Moe of the Communication department, garnered coach of the year honors for leading this team of old and young players alike.

The only game that kept them from a perfect regular record came against Top Hat to which they lost 48-30.

"We discovered an all-time low in basketball in that game. No team could've played as badly as we did," said Moe.

"We reached our maximum level of indignity. But, the game showed we were human and really humbled us - it made us better," added Moe.

The team is made up of Moe, Larry Kockeler and Mark Tolstedt, all professors of the Communication department.

Softball splits with Whitewater

Falls twice to St. Norbert's

by Mike McGill
Sports Writer

Coach Sharon Stellwagon's UWSP Women's softball team split an away doubleheader at Whitewater last Saturday, April 4 only to return home on Monday, April 6 and lose both games of a doubleheader against St. Norbert.

In the first game, pitchers Amy Steigerwald and Michelle Krueger, who also pitched all of game 2, helped fend off Whitewater 8-5.

Steigerwald and Krueger had help from an offense that included 11 hits and 7 runs batted in, featuring a 3 RBI double from right fielder Tammy Meister and 4 hits and 2 RBI's from catcher Mel Webb.

Whitewater managed 12 hits off the two pitchers, but they also committed four errors to UWSP's two.

In the second half of the doubleheaders, the Pointers didn't fare as well. Their four errors to Whitewater's one helped Whitewater edge the Pointers 8-6.

Point was out hit 15-10 and Whitewater's 7 team RBI's to UWSP's 5 proved to be the difference.

Sparking UWSP's offense were second baseman Jenny Struebing's 3 hits and 2 RBI's (including a triple) and Meister's 3 hits and 2 RBI's. Tina Peters added a stolen base.

At home vs. St. Norbert's, the women came up short in both games.

In the first game, with Krueger on the mound, St. Norbert's took the game 4-1 despite Krueger only giving up 5 hits. UWSP managed just 3 hits, one each by Struebing, Webb, and leftfielder Renee Olson, who singled in third baseman Jodi Lindquist for their only run.

In game two, Steigerwald struggled a bit as St. Norbert's cracked 11 hits off her, despite not allowing any walks en route to a 3-0 victory.

UWSP mustered six hits, two by ceterfielder Lisa Mortenson, but no runs.

This puts UWSP's record at 2-12 and they will try to improve upon that mark as they take part in the UW-Whitewater tournament on Friday and Saturday, April 10 and 11. Games start each day at 9 a.m.

Brewers need to stay away from injury

by Brady Kiel
Contributor

The 1992 baseball season is already upon us. What kind of fortune does that bring for the Brewers?

On paper, the team looks very competitive. There is a substantial amount of offense, commendable starting pitching and an untested bullpen.

But paper isn't reality and cautious optimism is what the Brewers require, as Monday's opener, a loss to Minnesota, illustrated.

Milwaukee's offense will definitely produce some runs this year. The outfield is abundant with hitters for power and batting average.

Last season left-fielder Greg Vaughn pounded 27 home runs and had 98 runs batted in, both team highs. Veteran center-fielder Robin Yount batted .250, hit ten homers and drove in 77 runs despite health problems.

Darryl Hamilton came into his own by hitting .311 and driving in 57 runs. The powerful, but strikeout-prone Dante Bichette homered 15 times with 59 runs batted in. He and Hamilton may plateau.

Ageless but oft-injured Paul Molitor added a .325 average, 17 homers and 74 RBI's from the designated hitter slot. These numbers are again reachable for these players if Milwaukee can avoid the multitude of injuries it usually incurs.

The infield packs less offensive punch than the outfield, but their defense is much improved. After years of defensive futility, this group was much better in 1991.

Franklin Stubbs, a proven power hitter, anchors first base after missing a third of 1991 with injuries. A timeless Brewer, Jimmy Gantner returns to second base with his slick fielding.

Bill Spiers returns at shortstop, also with excellent defensive skills. Newcomer Scott Fletcher could end up winning the second base job, but can back up at shortstop as well. Concerned with Gary Sheffield's shoddy performances at third, Milwaukee signed Kevin Seitzer to bolster their defense.

Catcher B.J. Surhoff turned in a good offensive year in 1991, but needs to handle the pitchers better behind the plate. The infield can make or break the Brewers.

Pitching is also critical for Milwaukee. Proven starters Bill Wegman (15-7, 2.84 ERA in '91), Jaime Navarro (15-12, 3.92) and Chris Bosio (14-10, 3.25) make the Brewer rotation competitive with most A.L. East teams.

But these men need to maintain these levels if the Brewers are to challenge. Bruce Ruffin was acquired to fill a rotation slot, but hasn't been effective in the past few seasons with the Phillies. Converted reliever Dan Plesac must impress as a starter or he may be out. The bullpen is hinging on improvement by Doug Henry and respectable contributions from retread Jesse Orosco and Ed Nunez among others.

New manager Phil Garner has quite an example to follow in Tom Treblehorn, who is now a coach with the Cubs. Garner's young, enthusiastic attitude and aggressiveness as a manager will be a new look to the Brewer team, and in total contrast to Treblehorn's laid-back style.

Can Garner lead the Brewers to win it? Yes, but all needs to fall in line. A possible trade for relief help along the way would be a boost.

But injuries remain the biggest deterrent to Milwaukee's success. A lack of major injury would make this an exciting season for Brewer faithful.

soon in the season."

"We were up there attacking the ball. Even the balls that were outs were line drivers," said Otte.

Otte attributed the hitting to the comfort the team had once the game got underway. "The fact that we came out swinging helped us relax."

In addition to the great offensive performances of Wagner, Schuett, Belling, and Krmar were Don Radomski, who had 3 RBI's, Matt Kohnle and Ken Krug, who each had a double and two hits, Kevin O'Brien, who had two stolen bases and Tim Hale, who was 2-3 in the second game.

The doubleheader sweep of Lakeland prepares the Pointers for a big weekend of games as they take on Oshkosh, Whitewater and Mt. Senario.

On Friday, the Pointers take on the Titans in Pointer. The first game starts at 1 pm.

Saturday, the Pointers will travel to Whitewater and Sunday they will go to Senario.

Both Oshkosh and Whitewater are top teams in the conference, each making a playoff appearance in the last couple years and Otte expects tough games from both of them. He believes that the Pointers are ready to take on both teams. "We're in a good frame of mind. Our goal at the start of the season was to be conference champs.

"To be the best we have to beat the best. We feel that if we get beat we won't beat ourselves. The other team must beat us."

Timcak, director of new student programs, and four students including former UWSP student Tim Rheel and current UWSP students Chris Stebnitz, Lee Pritzl and Frank Cismoski made up the rest of the team.

The team was placed into the Black & Blue League of the City Recreational League after winning the consolation bracket crown with a 4-1 record.

Sports Specialties was not only the last team to lose but the first team to clinch their division title.

The league is properly named Black & Blue as it is one of the more physically bruising ones in the city.

A perfect example of the bruising play in the league is a game Moe remembers Timcak playing in.

"He had been away when the season started and when he came back he joined the team. Before the game he slipped on the ice when he was taking out the garbage.

"He came to the game and acted as if nothing was wrong." So, Moe put him into the game. It didn't take long for him to come back out of the game - his knee was injured badly and he could fool nobody.

Timcak missed the rest of the season, which the team dedicated to him.

"He was an inspiration to us all in that we learned we should let somebody else take out the garbage." Moe said.

Kokkeler, in his 50's, "plays like he's in his 60's," according to Moe. "Despite that Larry always gives us a lift because of his determined effort to get a shot off no matter how hard we try to stop him from taking it."

Before Moe went on to say more about his excellent team, Stebnitz, Moe's center, had his own words about his favorite coach. "Moe was the crucial link to the success of our team. His brilliance on the sideline kept us in a lot of the games. I think the team felt safer having Moe on the sideline instead of on the court where he could do some damage."

The team member with the most enthusiasm was Wilson. "He'd call me the day after a game and he'd ask how he did in the game. He knew how he had done but he wanted to hear it from me," said Moe.

"When he wanted the ball he'd tell teammates of his wishes in his southern Virginia accent. He knew he was a good shooter and he wasn't afraid to tell anybody he wanted the ball," added Moe.

Feldman didn't see as much playing time during the season due to many other involvements, including massage class and a play.

"He only played four games. He was one of the quicker guys on the team. He was always assigned the leading scorer on the opposing team," Moe said.

"In one game, we played a box and one defense in which Bob was put on the opposing team's top player - he put his nose into the chest hairs of that guy - and gave up only one free throw to him.

"But then he had to leave to go to his massage class and the guy scored 16 points in the second half. Luckily, we still won the game.

"Tolstedt was a brute on the boards. He had more desire to get a rebound than Dennis Rodman--well, almost," Moe added.

The key to the team, according to Moe, was the play of four students on the team. The blend of faculty and students gave the team a neat fabric of mixed ages.

"Rheel was our franchise player. He led the league in scoring. He and Lee Pritzl were a combination that was almost magical. They had incredible play making," commented Moe.

"Those two successfully kept the other three team members on the court from scoring," added Moe.

Stebnitz was a key rebounder at 6-8 and Cismoski, along with the rest of the students on the team, made the faculty look like spectators.

The teams youth and conditioning "made the rest of us feel a lot younger, they meant a lot to us," Moe said.

"We were 8-0 before we finally fell to defeat. We beat everybody in the league, even the teams that beat us," said Moe.

"Anybody could go in and play at any time. All team members had their own role," added Moe. "This team put forth real team effort."

Danstage '92 leaves audiences "breathless"

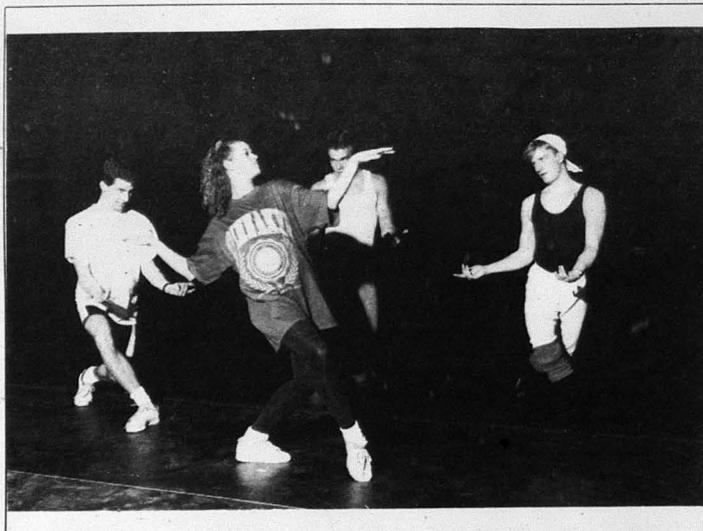

by Meredith Medland

Contributor

The UWSP Department of Theatre and Dance successfully presented Danstage '92 this past weekend. This show incorporated modern, tap and ballet choreographers: Susan Hughes Gingrasso, Joan Karlen, James Moore, and Gael Stepanek.

A unique singing and dancing piece, "And I looked over Jordan..."; featured talented vocalists Karen Horwitz, Scott Chenier, and Kevin Barthel. African music and dance rhythms were incorporated into several uplifting segments such as "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" and "Wade in the Water." All twelve tap and modern dancers were dressed in bright colors which jump-started Danstage '92.

A common favorite, "Mars: The Bringer of War and Venus: the Bringer of Peace," with provocative music from The Planets, left the opening night audience breathless because of the strong underlying message of time after war. Families were portrayed in a before and after war setting. The fantasy affect of rope ladders into the universe made this piece quite unique. This was an excellent example of professional choreography by Joan Karlen, a dance faculty member.

Danstage '92 performers present their interpretation of "West Side Story."

The dancers spent time with Sergeant Pête Liunaros and Cadets Andreas Ballard and Chad Chasten during rehearsals to master the military type dancing that dominated this powerful piece.

"For Rossini," a humorous ballet about what happens when last minute choreography changes are made and some of the dancers aren't present to get the new moves, kept the audience chuckling as "snobbish acting" dancers Stephanie Alt and Jody Maxymek led quarrels with other ballet dancers.

"N.Y. Export Opus Jazz," an after thought of Jerome Robbins work on West Side Story, concluded the evening of thought provoking pieces. Other pieces,

Art show celebrates ambitious 100 years

An art display that led to this year's celebration of women's achievements throughout the past 100 years, is now on display in the Carsten Art Gallery.

Curator Stanley Grand has called the "National Association of Women Artists: One Hundred Years" display "the most ambitious show that has been produced in this gallery in the last decade."

According to UWSP Professor Nancy Bayne, the idea of giving women recognition this year for their collective accomplishments during the last century, originated after the university learned that the traveling display would come to UWSP.

"We tend to emphasize the accomplishments of men," said Bayne. "For example, in the past we have asked men to speak at convocation. We also do it with informal material presented in the classroom."

UWSP observes last Rites

by Paul Matsuda
Contributor

The annual Rites of Writing program will return to UWSP on April 8-9; after that, it will continue no longer. That is why planners have called this one: "The Last Rites of Writing."

The program, which has been offered by the Academic Achievement Center since 1976, suddenly wasn't funded for next year because of the budget cuts that have been hitting many areas of the University.

"They are trying to close us down because we offer our services free of charge to students," said Julie Postier, one of the tutors at AAC. "The program wasn't bringing enough money."

But the lack of money did not stop many of the enthusiastic writers and educators from offering this program to students. All people involved in The Last Rites are volunteers and Postier is one of them.

She said many people are volunteering "because of their commitment to writing, the Academic Achievement Center and the University."

"The speakers we have are very good," said Postier. "Most of them are professors."

The presenters are: Richard Behm, Professor of English; Mary K. Croft, Professor Emeritus and the founder of the Writing Laboratory; Donna Decker, Assistant Professor; Daniel Dieterich, Professor of English and a senior staff member of the Writing Laboratory and Academic Achievement Center; Daniel Dieterich, senior editor for the North American Hunter magazine; Lisa Gay, Community Assessment Consultant for Jacobs Engineering Group Inc. of Chicago; Barry Ginter, outdoor writer and city editor for The Sheboygan Press.

Michael J. Goc, journalist and historian; Justin Isherwood, a farmer and writer; DyAnne Korda, writer; William Lawlor, Professor of English; Edith Nash, writer; Donna Nelson, Director of the General Studies Writing Program at Bowling Green State University; Marian Ritzer, teacher of creative writing at the Waukesha County Technical College; Barbara Fitz Vroman, writer; Bob Walker, Corporate Communication Manager at Consolidated Papers of Wisconsin Rapids; and Larry Watson, Professor of English.

Also Chuck Spanbauer, the owner and president of Palmer Publications, Inc., Mary "Casey" Martin, the owner of Collage by Casey, and Chuck Iberg, the owner of the Little Professor Book Center in Centerpoint Mall, will be participating in the panel discussion "From Print to Profit."

All sessions will be held in the University Center except the special session for Central Wisconsin Writing Project teachers, which will be presented by Dieterich in room 018 of Learning Resources Center.

Pointer Profile Whitcomb works for shared understanding

by Julie Apker
Features Editor

"People ask me how I became such a strong feminist, but I've always thought that people should be treated as fairly as possible, said Joan Whitcomb, women's issues director for the UWSP Student Government Association. "Certain groups are victimized by the system, whether it's unintentional or deliberate."

Whitcomb, a junior broadfield social science major, cites her involvement with various groups on campus such as SGA and the Women's Resource Center to have been particularly significant.

She believes that the exposure to many different aspects of campus has complemented her academic minor of Women's Studies, as well as influencing her strong views on women's issues. Her dedication was rewarded last year when she selected as "Women's Issues Director 1991," by United Council, a statewide student lobbying organization.

"My interests have given me raped in a hall on this campus two years ago," Whitcomb explained. "As a result, she failed all her classes that semester and withdrew from school. For me as a friend, especially as a person who is taking part in educating people on these issues, it's hard not to feel anger when I see this guy on campus."

Stopping Rape Together, a new campus group formed to give students the opportunity to problem.

"Many times men don't realize how many people that they're close to that have been sexually assaulted," she said. "It happens to their friends, sisters, girlfriends, but if they don't know, how can they become sensitive to the effects it has?"

Helping students raise their awareness about women's issues is an overall goal for Whitcomb. She believes strongly in the Women's Studies program at UWSP because the courses address different perspectives not found in traditional disciplines. In answer to some critics who question the need for such a program and the absence of a Men's Studies curriculum, Whitcomb is not reticent about sharing her views.

"Classes such as psychology, history, and sociology are traditionally taught from a more patriarchal system, while Women's Studies takes a strong stance on the same issues from a female perspective," Whitcomb said. "I'm not saying there's not legitimacy for men's views, but students need to per-the opportunity to work on events like the upcoming Sexual Assault Awareness Week and the Take Back the Night protest/rally, she explained. "Our purpose during the week of educational programming is to open people's eyes to the existence of gender-based incidents."

Started in the 1970's Take Back the Night is a national event held every year to raise awareness about violent crimes against women. The third annual march/rally will be held April 29 in the Sundial and will serve as the culmination for Sexual Assault Awareness Week held April 22-29.

According to Whitcomb, the close quarters of a university setting leads to an increase in incidents such as acquaintance rape. She thinks that educating students about "date rape" will help develop understanding between men and women about sexual behavior.

"It is the shared responsibility of both men and women to take control of their behaviors," stated Whitcomb. "Rape is not a crime of sex, but of hatred, violence and dominance. There are many misunderstandings about sexual assault, but submission is NOT consent."

Her opinions about sexual assault stem from her involvement on campus and in Women's Studies classes, but especially after hearing the experiences of friends who have been raped.

"A friend was acquaintance ceive a fuller understanding and education. Almost every class we have is a men's studies class."

"As we talk about accomplishments, we tend to expect that those accomplishments are going to be of men," she said. This display will bring people's awareness to the accomplishments of women, said Bayne.

Grand said the display reflects a number of styles from Weisler to Cubism. "It's a fun, logical overview of the work produced from women from the 1890s-1980s."

Highlights of the 50 piece display, according to Grand, are a dry point by Mary Cassatt, oil paintings by Cecilia Beaux and Alice Neel, and a needlepoint by Judy Chicago.

The show, which can be seen Monday through Friday from 10 a.m.- 4 p.m., and on weekends from 1 - 4 p.m., has several sponsors including Phillips Morris and Miller Brewing Co., and has been supported through grants from Wisconsin Bell and the Wisconsin Arts Board.

"Most people have been very pleased with the exhibit. In fact some have called it a museum. All of the people are very taken with the high quality of the work," said Grand.

"I think it has been very well attended and it's certainly worth the time to see it."

won't let this country be separated by race, by ethnic group, by gender, by age, by income or by region. If you vote for me you're going to have someone who says we're going up or down together. I've done everything I could to give this election back to the american people."

Congressman David Obey, who introduced Governor Clinton, also commented on the country's current economic position and what he believes can be changed if Clinton is elected.

"For the last twelve years, this country has been run by a coalition of republicans in the White House and Congress who have imposed on this country an economic policy that has doubled our deficit, doubled our debt, and has really destroyed the future of an entire generation," he said.

"I am tired of people who are running the United States government on the trickle-down theory," he added. "I know you can count on Bill Clinton to do the job in the critical areas of education, taxes, and health care."

Hunger hobo to speak

by Meredith Medland
Contributor

Peace activist and Vietnam veteran John McCue will speak in conjunction with ACT's Hunger Cleanup, a national one-day community service work-a-thon to benefit hunger and homelessness, on Monday, April 13, at 7:00 pm in the Wright Lounge.

John McCue, also known to his friends as "Songbird," is a man who has experienced homelessness first hand. He will be discussing his personal experience as a homeless person, problems he incurred, and reasons why homeless people have a difficult time getting jobs.

This program will jump start with music from local "folk-n-roll" singer Shane Totten, also known as Captain Ecology. (Don't miss Shane's latest song written especially for Hunger Cleanup.)

Then, "Songbird" McCue will lead an open question and answer session sharing his insights through his folk music.

In August of 1990 McCue was elected National King of the Hobos, and represented homeless people in Washington D.C. In 1991, he was appointed poet laureate at the National Hobo Convention. In 1982 he retired from the road and married, settling down.

Now he travels whenever he can to help with causes such as hunger and homelessness. Everyone is invited and encouraged to attend this inspirational presentation on Monday, April 13th at 7 p.m. in the Wright Lounge.

Fire crew, learn and burn

by Buck Jennings
Outdoors Editor

Dr. James Cook (faculty advisor to the UWSP fire crew) explained how the crew is unique among campus student organizations. Quite possibly the only organization of its kind in the United States, the fire crew is trained in carrying out controlled burns for habitat management as well as in fighting wild fires.

The organization is open to all university students who need only to complete a fire crew course at the university. Cook said that the course is directed by the DNR and takes place each fall.

The fire crews' services are most frequently called for in the spring when most controlled burning takes place. The crew has been employed by the DNR, the U.S. forest service, non-profit organizations such as the nature conservancy, as well as occasional private land owners.

Earlier this spring the fire crew control-burned about three acres in our own Schmeekle Reserve.

Last weekend fire crew members worked at White Mound County Park in Sauk Co.

Under the direction of burn coordinator Harley Synder, the crew burned about 400 acres in 9 separate controlled burns.

Crew boss and Pointer Photographer Al Crouch explained some of the situations encountered and techniques employed by the fire crew this past weekend.

The burns were necessary to achieve wildlife habitat management goals within the 1100 acre county park. Habitat diversity is emphasized within the park and the crew burned prairie grasses, red oak woodlands, and one wetland area.

Al explained that people hear of burning oak forest and think of huge roaring flames. In reality the "surface" burns occur only in the understory and not in the tree's crowns. Contrary to belief, poor air circulation and lack of "flashy" fuel means this type of burn is relatively cool.

It's the prairie grasses which burn fast and hot. Al described the basic procedure in this type of burn.

Crew members wearing fifty pound back cans full of water establish a "wet line" by spraying water on the ground.

Other crew members "burn out a line" with torches on the windward side of this wet line. The fire is carefully backed into the wind to create a burnt out margin which prevents the burn from spreading to surrounding areas.

widen the "line" to a safe margin before the final burn is started at the top, windward side of the desired area.

Al explained that it is essential that the fire crew work as a team so much so that they act almost like a single organism.

A great deal of planning goes into each controlled burn. Every detail must be taken into account, from topography, fuel type and load, weather forecasts, to announcing to local fire departments when and where the burn will be taking place.

To illustrate the amount of heat, flames, and smoke generated by a single prairie grass fire last weekend, Al related the following story. Last Saturday evening the crew prepared to complete it's final burn of that day.

"As the burn reached its peak area 911 switchboards were jammed."

The burn was to cover a section of grassland on relatively high ground within the park. As the burn reached it's peak area 911 switchboards were jammed. Calls were received from as far away as Madison.

Despite forewarnings, local fire departments began to arrive on the scene. In all, nine different fire departments from three separate counties were dispatched to the "forest fire."

According to Al, everything was going as planned and under control.

Crouch commented that the fire crew is a great experience for both men and women. A sort of camaraderie develops and people who have never met one another come back as good friends.

Conservation congress?

by Al Crouch
Photo Editor

How often do you wish you had a say in the regulations imposed by the DNR? What can you do to make a difference? I'm sure that most people, if given the chance, would have a lot to say (most of it not good) about the rules governing our natural resources. Monday night, I found myself in a large auditorium at Ben Franklin Jr. High wondering if the horror stories I heard about tonight were actually going to be true. As a dedicated member of the press (and for an extra credit paper for class) I attended the conservation congress meeting, a memory which I will never forget.

The DNR spring fish and game hearings, and conservation congress, is a privilege to all county citizens. The annual gathering is a place where members of the general public can air their griefs, questions, suggestions, recommendations, and frustrations, and exercise their right to vote on issues and be directly involved in policy making efforts in the state of Wisconsin. Its a good place to talk one on one, and openly, about issues that effect each and every citizen of the county.

Meetings are held in each county on the same day of the year. I theory, the annual meeting between the Department of Natural Resources, Conservation Congress, public interest groups, sportsman clubs, private land owners, and general public, is a good way to get the people's opinion on hot topics concerning those who use utilize our natural resources directly. But every good idea, has its flaws.

Although members of the audience raised thought provoking questions, the members of the panel (what we call the "experts") were unable to respond with constructive answers. They appeared to know very little and were unprepared to handle a majority of the very topics at hand. Along with the incompetence of the panel to field questions, background in-

Some tips for proper composting

Madison, WI -- If you're wondering this spring what to do with the leaves and brush that blow onto your lawn last winter, let nature do the disposal work for you. Start a compost heap in your yard.

"Composting is an excellent way to turn would-be yard waste into ecological gold," said Department of Natural Resources Compost Specialist Georgia Reay.

With minimum effort, Reay says you'll wind up with a crumbly humus that is rich in carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, phosphorus, potassium, calcium, magnesium and sulfur - all basic nutrients necessary for plant growth. Compost is also a good weed inhibitor and soil aerator.

"Starting your own compost site will also save you time and expense," she added.

In some Wisconsin communities, the need to conserve landfill space or save on waste disposal costs has led to early bans on putting yard materials in landfills and incinerators that burn without energy recovery. As of January 1, 1993 a statewide ban will go into effect.

Soggy clumps of leaves covering your lawn can prevent moisture from evaporating from the soil and should be removed, Reay says. Mix them with straw or small brush and they make an excellent compost starter.

Spring turkey hunt nears

Wisconsinites try their luck on April 15

Madison, Wis. -- This year, April 15 is a date many Wisconsinites are anxiously looking forward to. But it's turkeys, not taxes, that have them excited.

Wisconsin's 10th spring wild turkey hunting season begins April 15, and nearly 44,000 hunters will be looking to bag one of those big birds.

"If weather conditions are good this spring, the turkey harvest could exceed 8,000 turkeys for the first time ever," said Bill Vander Zouwen, turkey program coordinator for the Department of Natural Resources.

Turkey hunting in Wisconsin is allowed by permit only. A record 48,120 turkey permits were available, up almost 7,000 from last spring's season.

Turkey permits are issued for a specific zone and hunting period. This spring's six-day Wednesday-through-Sunday hunting periods run from April 15-19, April 22-26, April 29-May 3, May 6-10, May 13-17 and May 20-24.

Vander Zouwen anticipates a hunter success rate of approximately 20 percent, which is typical of spring turkey hunts in the state. In the spring of 1991 hunters bagged 6,862 turkeys.

A total of 36 zones are available to hunt in, including 16 new ones: zone 19 in west-central Wisconsin, zones 17, 26, 27 and 28 in the southeast, and zones in 11 state parks.

Vander Zouwen noted that this is the first time a limited amount of turkey hunting - 180 permits total - will be allowed in 11 state parks. Five of the parks will provide hunting opportunities for hunters with disabilities. In all 11 parks, hunting is limited to the first three time periods so it will be finished before the time most recreational camping begins.

Wisconsin's wild turkey population is estimated at 105,000, located in approximately 50 counties south of a line running from Marinette to Polk counties. Vander Zouwen said the highest density of birds is in the southwest, where Missouri turkeys were originally released and the habitat is best suited for the big birds.

"Turkeys are tough birds," said Vander Zouwen. "They can take a lot of shot and still get up and run or fly away." He suggests refraining from shooting at turkeys that are more than 40 yards away. Before going hunting, he also recommends that hunters "pattern" their gun with the shot shells they plan on using to see how the pattern looks at different ranges. At least a half dozen pellets should hit a turkey in the head or the neck.

Vander Zouwen also offered these reminders to hunters:

- * Be sure of your target. Hunting accidents result from a hunter mistaking another hunter for a turkey. Never shoot at movements or sounds.

- * Never wear red, white, or blue. These colors appear on the head of a turkey. Stalking is NOT a good strategy. It is nearly impossible to sneak up on a turkey, and this practice may lead to accidents.

- * The turkey must be a gobbler (adult male) or jake (adolescent male). Look for the beard before you shoot.

- * Hunters must purchase a turkey stamp ($5.25) and a spring turkey hunting license ($8 resident, $50 nonresident) before turkey hunting.

- * Successful hunters must register their turkey at a designated registration station by 1:30 p.m. on the day of the kill.

- * Only shot sizes #4 lead or #2 steel or smaller are legal.

- * Hunters may have others assist them in calling a turkey. However, a new law this year makes it illegal for anyone assisting another hunter to be in possession of a gun or bow unless they also have a valid turkey permit for that same period and hunting zone.

"The future of turkey hunting depends on good hunter/landowner relations," Vander Zouwen emphasized. "Hunters should respect landowner rights, have permission to hunt, and know the property boundaries of the land."

"One way hunters can show their thanks is by sending their Landowner Appreciation Day envelope, which they received with their permit, along with $5 to the National Wild Turkey Federation to get a landowner pass that entitles the landowner and his family to attend a free picnic in June."

formation about the proposals to be voted on was very limited and none was provided. How then can one have appropriately made a sound decision on which way to vote without the facts?

When the floor was opened for discussion I wondered how much the DNR even considered the suggestions made by the public. I suppose no back-forty yah-hey is going to tell the "experts" how to handle these issues. After all, the experts know best.

Whose brainstorm are these anyway? Where did these questions originate? Personally, I'd like to know who in the DNR thought opening raccoon hunting during deer season was a good idea. I'd like his job. Did they really think the public would go for this? This is only one example of some of the questions discussed that night. When given a descent question, I felt restricted on the power I had to actually implement change. Why vote at all on the special restrictions when not one member in the audience favors the entire concept at all? Did they actually think that rifle deer hunters would like the idea of night raccoon hunters and dogs in the woods during the gun season?

The DNR seemed to tack the deck in how they worded the proposals. To me one question read, "Hey-we're going to have a bobcat hunt next year whether you like it or not...but we'll let you vote on the restrictions. I have to pity the poor animal rights activist who can't express his vote to not have a season at all."

The Portage county hearing,

I'm sure, was special in it's own way due to the presence and effect of a good number of concerned university students directly involved with conservation. They upset the traditional balance of power held by older generations of farmers and private landowners, which by casual eavesdropping, seemed to be ignorant of any environmental knowledge and concept of integrated resource management. They were almost sickening to listen to at times. It was clear these folks whistled a tune more familiar with economists and egomaniac hunters.

I think the annual hearings are a good way to get people involved and give them the power to express their opinions. but I slowly begin to lose trust in the DNR to manage our lands, and each integral piece of them, wisely. I am not an anti-hunter but I believe in a plan that serves a broader clientele. The unprofessionalism expressed by the controllers of the meeting raised doubt as to whether these proposals were any different than any one of us unfortunate souls in the audience. The concept of the Conservation Congress is still a viable one, but cannot be operated in the fashion it is today.

You have to be professional enough and competent enough to be able to prevent people from walking out. A public speaking class would help. With more emphasis and consideration of public suggestions and more open-ended proposals, I believe the worth of such a hearing will increase dramatically. But until then, I'll keep paying the rising licensing fees, and taking part in my share and wonder...where does all that money go?

Compost

Pine needles are also compostable, but Reay recommends leaving them where they fall to maintain proper soil balance and to cushion and protect pine trees' shallow root systems.

If you cannot use all your compostable garden resources, Reay suggests calling your municipal or county department of public works to find out how, when, and where you may dispose of them.

Some Wisconsin municipalities outlaw burning of yard debris, she said, because leaves, grass, brush, and tree branches produce smoke laden

"You want your compost pile to be as moist as a wrung-out sponge," she said. "So it's important that you combine the wet leaves with some kind of organic matter that will allow air to circulate and help dry them out."

Chopping up your leaves and other yard debris, to reduce surface area, will help them decompose more quickly.

with irritants that may make breathing difficult for people with allergies or asthma.

"Many communities see backyard burning as a fire and safety hazard and a nuisance to neighbors," she added, "which is yet another good reason to consider composting."

Gardening experts offer a variety of recipes for making the perfect compost pile, telling you how to layer all the ingredients in a scientific manner, explained Reay. But a compost pile can be as simple as you want.

"The only difference between the more precise compost heaps and the ones where you toss everything together willy-nilly is time," she said. "The better-managed compost piles work faster, but in the end they all get the job done naturally."

Yard debris, according to a recent Department of Natural Resources study, accounted for 16-20 percent of what went into Wisconsin landfills last year. Almost 200 community recycling programs statewide are already handling leaves, grass, brush, and other garden resources in compliance with the 1993 ban.

Environmental ed answer to animal cruelty

by Wendy Wagner Kraft
Staff Writer

This is not about if you'd prefer a t-bone or a tofu patty placed upon your dinner plate. Nor is this about how your shampoo was tested or if you choose to wear fluorescent orange come November. This is not about comparing the so-called value of one species to another, and this is not saying that there are not injustices far worse than the one you are about to read, occurring each day to members of our own species. This piece does nothing more than ask two questions - why and what?

An incident of cruelty occurred here in our Central Wisconsin backyard. A bird was shot, not for any purpose of hunting to feed one's family, but for reasons unclear. On February 15 of this year two 17 year old males from Wisconsin Rapids shot a protected golden eagle as it flew from a tree in the Sandhill Wildlife Area.

After being shot the bird fell to the ground whereupon the second individual, who did not actually do the shooting, ran over to it and began hitting it. A warden was quoted as saying in the March 3rd edition of the Stevens Point Journal that this individual "beat it (the eagle) over the head with a branch with the intent of killing it." The same warden said in the Journal piece that this individual commented that he had hit the bird in the head at least 10 times and then kicked it "real hard."

The two males said they thought they were shooting at a hawk, another protected species, but realized after they shot the bird that it was not a hawk. At this point the bird was beaten and left for dead.

The two males were fined $25.00 each in the Wood County Juvenile Court and ordered to perform 200 hours of community service.

The golden eagle is now at the Raptorial Center in St. Paul, Minnesota where it is recuperating. At first the bird was thought to have been rendered blind from the beating but now has gained partial sight back. However, surgery had to be performed on the bird's left wing so that two pins could be placed to set the broken ulna and radius bones. It is not sure if the bird will ever fly again.

So the first question to ponder is, "Why?" Why were these boys shooting at what they thought was a hawk in the first place? Why beat a bird once realizing it was not a hawk? And, why leave it for dead?

Although the bird in this incident was rare to our area the occurrence of cruelty to other living creatures is not. As an environmental education major I have met children who have joked to me about plugging the blackbirds around their homes, and I have talked to adults that believe it is ok to shoot squirrels off their bird feeders. I have also known teenagers who think it's funny to chase down deer in a pick-up truck.

The second question to ponder is, "What?" What are we teaching our children? That it is correct to find personal enjoyment in the suffering of another living creature? That some species are less alive than others simply because we see them as a nuisance or expendable? What then is going to prevent a person who finds enjoyment in these acts of cruelty from progressing to targets of their own species?

Please do not confuse the point being made here. I am not saying you should never swat a fly or that you should leave rats in your home, if you are so lucky as to have them. I am referring to the acts of senseless cruelty for the sole purpose of satisfying the perpetrator.

There is, however, a great deterrent to these kinds of acts - environmental education. Once children understand that all life needs to be respected for what it is, they are less likely to destroy it. A strong foundation of environmental education in a child's life can help bring about this kind of respect. Children that are environmentally literate grow up to be environmentally literate adults.

Summer jobs make dollars and sense

by Kelly Lecker
Contributor

Summer is approaching, and many students are frantically searching for jobs. These students need not worry, however, because the Student Employment Office has summer jobs for any type of student.

"We try to match the students with jobs that match their skills," said Judy Kroening, Office Manager. "We have jobs here for almost anybody."

Camp positions are the most numerous jobs available for the summer. Among some of the camps looking for help are 4-H camps, YMCA, and conservation camps, which are located across the country.

"We have received many requests for help in camps," Kroening stated. "Those are most popular jobs."

For the baseball fanatic, there are job openings for umpires around the Stevens Point area.

Students who would like to work outside may be interested in raking leaves for homes or schools or working on a sanitation crew.

A "tent assistant" is also in demand for anyone who is interested in assembling and taking down tents and other equipment.

There are even job openings for go-cart attendants at an amusement park, tutors and county 4-H interns.

April 5 through 11 has been designated "National Student Employment Week," and it also marks the 10th anniversary of the UWSP Student Employment Office. To celebrate this event, UWSP held a job fair each day in the University Center.

Kelly Temporary Services was one of the companies recruiting students at the job fair. Kelly offers students the opportunity to work at a number of different jobs, including typists and other secretarial work.

"This job is ideal for students who have vacations or other events planned for part of the summer," said the Kelly representative. "We can offer them temporary jobs that fit into their schedules."

The Student Employment Office encourages interested students to come ask about available summer jobs. For more information call 346-2174.

"We have an adequate number of jobs," one worker stated. "Students just need to come in and find out about them."
