Doobie smokers’ future in Jeopardy

In a startling discovery, security officers for UW-Stevens Point stumbled upon a secret tunnel between two campus dorms, Roach and Hyer.

"It appears someone has built a tunnel connecting the two halls," Johnny Six-Shooter, Director of Security, confirmed. "Our reports indicate that students use the tunnel for smoking marijuana, of all things."

The security officer who discovered the tunnel said he was just on a regular patrol route when he came upon a refreshing fragrance.

"I noticed a funky smell when I was checking out the dorms," said officer Frank Cannabis. "I followed the smell and I came across this tunnel."

Officers found numerous rooms that branch off the tunnel where students were relaxing to the sounds of Bob Marley and Led Zeppelin.

Officers detained one student when they found him huddled in the corner of one of the rooms holding a bag of Cheetos.

"The student said his name was Smokey. He was obviously high when we found him," said Six-Shooter. "This individual claimed he lived in the tunnel and would only leave it to find food, buy cigarettes, and to occasionally attend class."

Smokey described to security officers the existence of another tunnel underneath the campus.

"I know there is a tunnel that leads to the Allen Center C-Store, man," said Smokey. "I've been in it; where else would I buy overpriced cereal?"

SGA meeting freezes due to motions

By Old Friends
WRITTEN INSIDE

The duties of Student Government Association came to a screeching halt after a motion was passed during their weekly Thursday night meetings.

According to a janitor at the University Center, SGA officials voted to not vote, therefore leaving the meeting stuck within its own parliamentary procedure process.

"It was all weird and stuff," said the janitor, who was waxing light fixtures.

"The SGA peoples just can't get along," boasted Phil Blunt, head of the SGA. "But Tremendous Tunnel on Page 3"

Parliamentary Procedures allow meetings to be conducted in a more orderly and understandable fashion, but apparently a few senators didn't understand the process.

According to a university contract signed by every SGA member, "no person can leave the weekly meetings without voting to adjourn for the night."

Due to the contract SGA officials will not be able to leave the meeting room until semester ends, causing the termination of their contract.

The janitor reported that the last few words he heard were "See Freeze on Page 7"

Beer company spews out truth

In a surprise announcement on Saturday, the board of directors at Anheuser-Busch confessed that their beer product Busch Light, a perennial favorite at UW-Stevens Point and campuses across the nation, is actually canned water.

"We want the beer drinking population out there to know that this was not an oversight. It was, in fact, a profit making scheme from the start. If those fools fell for it, then that's their problem," the board commented.

The announcement caused a general furor, especially here at UW-SP, where the percentage of beer drinkers is a bit higher than at other institutions.

"This is my favorite beer," lamented UW-SP freshman Johnny Quest when asked about the revelation. "Now I just don't know what to do. Do I still drink it, or look for a new beer?"

Milwaukee's Best executives refused to comment when they were approached about the suspicious similarity of their product to Busch Light. However, Rhonda Symmons, a line worker at their plant in Milwaukee, commented, "It does taste a little funny, doesn't it? And we don't have a liquor license, either. Hmmmm..."

Attached to the announcement was the fact that another product of Anheuser-Busch, Icehouse, also spews out truth.

“The center of the residence hall will harbor a huge vat of a new Point beer, in which students can buy bottles with their food or personal points. Wasser said, “At least they won’t know what is in the pudding,” mumbled one DeBot official.

“Apparent, the club is looking into the club, along with all the drinks you can handle. The club has enough excess in its budget to fund the next two years. Not only can students come and have a great time dancing, they can now throw a few down for good measure,” Ellis said. UW-SP student F.R. Dent said, “Now my girlfriend Polly and I can experience everything the night life has to offer at UW-SP, all at one place.”

In the past, students dropped the hammer before coming to Tremors, but now as Ellis said, “We have it all.” The bar will serve an assortment of beer and old fashion drinks like brandy on the rocks. Tremors is ready to serve the needs of every freak that attends the club. Apparently, the club is looking into another change in the near future. According to Ellis, a proposal is in the works to add stripper cages at various locations on the floor. Some details need to be worked out, but he expects the cages to open next fall.

Tommy Thompson, and Point President Brun Wasser discussed the final details of a 900,000 square-foot expansion onto the brewery. The hall will house 2,000 noteworthy students. Wasser said, “Now my girlfriend Polly and I can experience everything the night life has to offer at UW-SP, all at one place.”

Protective Services’ Tip of the Century

People in automobiles are more likely to be participants in accidents involving other automobiles. One-hundred percent of those involved in automobile accidents were riding in the automobile at the time of the accident. The Automobile Association of America said chances of surviving such an accident are much better for those who ride outside the car, such as on the roof, hood, trunk or by hanging on to the suspension.

Plans for a new hall discussed

By Ben Nowhere

With enrollment numbers expected to rise in the thousands at UW-Stevens Point, administrative officials have signed a contract, in collaboration with the Point Brewing Co., to build a new residence hall. In a closed meeting at Point Brewery, Chancellor Thomas George, Governor Tommy Thompson, and Point President Brun Wasser discussed the final details of a 900,000 square-foot expansion onto the brewery. The hall will house 2,000 noteworthy students.

“The new building will give students an opportunity to be closer to the downtown area,” said Chancellor Thomas George. The new hall will house only undergraduates who meet a specific criteria. "Admission standards will be altered due to the new building," said Dave Eckholm Director of Admissions and Records. “UW-SP students will have to drink at least a 12 pack minimum on a nightly basis and standards will increase yearly to get rid of slackers in the program.”

The center of the residence hall will harbor a huge vat of a new Point beer, in which students can buy bottles with their food or personal points. Wasser reported the beer would be made from 100% pure Wisconsin River water.

“The new brew, leaning on the lite side, will have its own unique taste,” Wasser said. Governor Thompson strongly supports the university’s decision, which will eventually lead to the abolishment of state assisted fees.

“UW-Stevens Point will be at the cutting edge of residence hall living conditions,” Thompson said. Thompson also noted that this story really needs to fill some space. Maybe you could talk about the great successes of my career. Ok.

UW-Stevens Point’s very own underage dance club has added a new feature to its weekend entertainment. The club now will highlight an open bar on nights of normal operation. Tremors student manager Aaron Ellis said to get wasted at the club at the University’s expense,” said Ellis. Students now will pay three dollars instead of two at the door. The charge will cover admittance into the club, along with all the drinks you can handle.

UW-SP follows elite colleges’ regulations

By Nitsud Koebrevo

Student Government Association (SGA) recently approved a new UW-Stevens Point campus rule which implements the residence hall myth that students receive a 4.0 grade point average for the semester due to grievances over the loss of a roommate, if their roommate should die.

“I was really glad to know that my grievance over the loss of my roommate was advantageous to my academic career goals,” said Yerkey.

Campus security is beefing up its emergency response team and hopes it doesn’t see an increase in this year’s roommate death toll. “We know that students are under a lot of stress, especially directly after Spring Break and midway through the semester. I want to emphasize that killing one’s roommate does not denote an automatic 4.0 [for the semester]. Only accidental deaths are considered,” reports security officer, Vladimir Horowisz.

Chancellor George recommends students should spend more time studying than plotting the accidental death of a roommate. “Besides, the moral implications are detrimental,” George adds.

A firsttimer's trip to Point bars

Dear Editor:

A few weeks ago, I finally learned my way into the Stevens Point bar scene—legally. I stress legally because although I'm just now finally 21 years of age, there were a few bars that I confess to entering when I was not supposed to.

The last couple of weeks have been a real learning experience for me and I've had a chance to venture into quite a few of the area's watering holes. Here are a few experiences I've had at some of those places:

1) Buffy's Lampoon—Buffy's is certainly a first timer to any town's bar scene. It is the only bar in Wisconsin where the floor is an optional location to urinate. Those who are accustomed to the bar scene, but not Buffy's might not only find it odd to know the Lampoon actually has bottles of Old Milwaukee for sale, but that "Old Swill" is a must when purchasing a bottle of beer.

Almost alright; I love these redheads

Dear Editor:

Alright, alright, alright. I have finally been accepted to UW-Stevens Point. Let me tell you, it's quite an honor.

Lately I've been working for the city. Ya know, keeping some change out of a parking meter. I've been thinking about getting back in school though. Then again, I just assume keep working. I don't wanna sit and listen to a dipshit who don't know what he's talking about. So I thought I'd try college.

Normally my day consists of working, hanging out at the poolhall, and sitting around, play football, pool, and drink some beer.

Sometimes, if I win some money shooting some stick, I'll have a party at the sight-seeing tower.

After getting used to stepping in vomit and playing pool with a rack of balls that contains two 3-balls, I realized Buffy's contains the most character out of any of the bars on "the Square" and therefore worthy of a top rating.

2) Bruiser's—It seems anybody with a piece of plastic walked through the door. Maybe they thought it was high school me and I.

I'm not much for watching idiot make fun of other idiots, so I left the dance floor and went downstairs. Downstairs is one of the best spots in town to sit and soak, unless you're drinking mixers. I've never witnessed someone order a whiskey straight up before and get served a whiskey and water. So even though I'm a beer drinker, I give Bruiser's a grade slightly above fair.

3) Goo's—After waiting in the bar by myself for 45 minutes, I decided to go elsewhere. Grade incomplete.

4) Rusty's Backwater—Happen to be a big Bloody Mary fan and the long trip out was well worth it. The food was also excellent, but I have admit that there was one flaw in the evening. For some reason, after drinking a fair share I tend to want to tell my favorite joke about three Polish guys from Stevens Point who all die on the same day and explain their story to Saint Peter. Big Mistake.

I'm not sure the regular patrons of the Backwater will welcome me with open arms next time. A top notch grade none-the-less.

5) The Penalty Box—Going to the "P-Box" was nothing special when my birthday rolled around. The truth is, I've been going there since I was a freshman asking the bartender for a bottle of Milwaukee's Best Light. And they thought I was of age! I'd be willing to bet my fifteen year old brother would be considered at the door with his high school ID in hand. Grade: Low.

Let me tell you what I love about these high school girls: I get older, they stay the same age.

My good friend Mitch Kramer says this year's crop of freshman girls looks promising. Maybe they'll dig me.

I could buy them beer, since I am 26 and I could drive them around this great city. Heck, they could even do my homework for me.

I'd like to thank the admissions office for making my wish come true.

But frankly I'd like to see some better concerts on campus. Man, I saw Led Zeppelin once and it rocked. John Bonham had a beat root. But frankly I'd like to see some better concerts on campus. Man, I saw Led Zeppelin once and it rocked. John Bonham had a beat root.

Debot serves up Endangered feast

By Aldo Leopold

A nerve-racking year of dodging determined wardens and federal investigators paid off Easter Sunday as the country's largest student chapter of The Poaching Society presented their annual Easter Extravaganza in the famous Debout Cafeteria.

"Dead Eye" Dick Disher, head chef and reigning president of the chapter, called the buffet "his club's most rewarding, but challenging effort yet."

"Last year was especially difficult for our club," said Disher with a tear in his eye.

"Two of our boys got busted trying to buy an orangutan from an undercover Fed, and three others were turned in by tourists after clubbing a baby harp seal in Alaska."

However, the remaining twelve poachers succeeded in bringing in the club's largest harvest.

The tables were lined with mouthwatering dishes prepared by Debout's highly acclaimed "lunch ladies." Among the entrees were stuffed spotted owl, barbecued California condor, Australian koala-bobs, tender chops of Schmeekle fawns, smoked bottle nose dolphin, sea turtle soup, and of course, braised bald eagle.

The braised eagle, a hefty seven year-old female, seemed to be the hands down favorite. In twenty minutes, the ravenous guests scraped every shred of dark eagle meat from its silver platter.

"She sure didn't come easy," said Chad "Rabid Weasel" Moder beaming with pride.

"Soon as she saw me shimmy up the tree beside her, she left the nest, eggs and all, and came swooping right at me like this..." (pretends his hands are talons and claws at the air in front of his face) "she cut my cheek and knocked me off the tree, so I blasted the bitch with my twelve gauge."

Among the 300 distinguished guests invited to attend the chapter's gala was Chancellor George, who thought "too stuffed to comment" showed his approval with two enthusiastic thumbs up. Representing faculty professionals in the College of Natural Resources, Dean Alan Haney offered a mixed response.

"I can not say I endorse this meal, nor The Poaching Society in general, since I think the illegal harvest of any species, especially ones of sentimental value, is extremely unethical and socially destructive," said Haney.

"However, I have to admit, it does taste pretty damn good." Many of the guests returned to the tables with sheepish grins as they shoveled third and fourth helpings onto their brown plastic plates.

Dead-eye Disher watched contentedly, leaning against a wall behind the tables with a satisfied smile on his face.

"Yep," he said, lighting a Cuban cigar, "it feels good to know you made people happy. That's what we're all about. Next year will be even better, I promise."

CNR causes financial crisis

By Quack Quack

The new addition to the College of Natural Resources building apparently went way over budget and The Pointer has discovered it dipped into the other colleges' budget money to do so.

Because the CNR has stolen money, many other majors are on the brink of extinction and many events will need to be canceled.

Dr. Ed Gasque, professor of biology at UW-Stevens Point, told his Cell Biology class last semester that the CNR is having a radio auction to help raise money for the new facility.

"What will they sell? Well, rumor is they have acquired a laminar flow hood and centrifuge machine.

"Our sources, although not very sure, have told us that they are not the ones found in Dr. Gasque's lab (if they have the serial numbers and identification plates scratched off do not be too surprised though.)

"They will also be auctioning off Gateway 2,000 computers. It is only coincidence that their is a connection between these and the computers from the other computer labs on campus that have also been forced to close."

The Pointer also learned that the total cost of the new building came to a whopping $325 million. Don't get us wrong, the building is very aesthetically pleasing and the serves as a great learning facility. The money was also not wasted in the engineering budget.

Most of the money went to paying the brilliant engineer who designed a slope of the roof so that the entrance way is unusable and we have a huge, falling ice/snow. The Pointer also discovered that the entrance way is unusable and the serving as a great learning facility.

But here's one of our favorites; a good ole' fashioned controlled combustion. After a winter of mittens, scarves, and snow suits, the clothes will hit the sand. Guided lessons begin at 8 PM to be followed by hours of open fun.

Flying Squirrel Hunt.

"Prairie dogs have quickly become a favorite target for western sportsmen, but we've got one up on them right here. Stevens Point is fortunate enough to have two separate species of the air-borne rats and after extensive field testing, they have proven to be excellent targets for BB gun enthusiasts. Learn about the animal's nocturnal habits with a three hour slide show then hit the forests ready to shoot. However, a fifty-question scan-tron followed by a grueling physical test must be satisfactorily completed before anyone is admitted. If you should pass, stock up on BB's and oil those air rifles, it should be a long night.

Midnight Harvest

"We will be meeting at Schmeekle Visitor Center on May 2 to do a little hunting harvest. With the proliferation of farms in the Amburist area, we should be able to find some kind bud to harvest in a few short hours of looking. Bring flashlights and running gear, and a bulletproof vest if owned. UW–SP hereby declares itself immune from all liability."

Clearcut Bonanza

"Schmeekle reserve will be clearcut on May 13, and we need your help to drag trees out to the waiting trucks. Volunteers will each receive a commemorative pin with the logo "Death to Trees" on it. "Tree-Huggers" need not apply. Meet at the visitor center at 8 a.m. and we will work all day and night if necessary. Thanks in advance from Consolidated Papers."
So I’m walking in Central Park one day when I see this guy. He takes one look at my Armani jacket, and asks me for my wallet. What happened next is a story worth telling anywhere. “Forget about it,” I said, thinking what this guy would look like with his nose on the other side of his face. He then had the nerve to put his hand in his pocket and point his finger at me through the fabric like I was gonna think that it looked like a gun. “C'mon old man,” he says, obviously thinking that I wasn’t who I looked like. “Do you really want my wallet, young man?” “Of course, you friggin’ fruitcake, you think I want your spaghetti recipe or somethin’?” So now he had insulted me and my heritage. This was, of course, intolerable. Okay, I thought, let’s teach this jackass where the power is in this town. “Please, sir, don’t shoot,” I said, edging towards the car. “This here is my car, and I got five hundred cash in here. Just don’t shoot, okay?” “You got it, old man, just give me the money!” I could hear the anticipation in his voice. Christ, this guy was clueless. I opened the door and pulled out my wallet, palming a .22 automatic pistol as I did so. “Here you go, you fagazi.” His face lit up as I handed over the cash. “Now have this,” I said, as I shot him in both kneecaps. He went down like a ton of bricks, howling and holding both kneecaps. “You shot me!” he screamed through clenched teeth. “That’s right,” I said, kneeling down beside him. “Now, I’m going to kick your ass all over this park.” I kicked him in the belly, hard. He doubled up, alternately holding his belly and his knees. I grabbed him by his head and tossed him into the woods. He grabbed my five beaners where he had dropped them when I shot him. “That’s right,” I said, congratulating them for being smarter than this guy, and then kicked him in the head. He gave a yelp, and then was still. I grabbed my five beaners where he had dropped them when I shot him, and stuffed them in his mouth. I then shot him twice in the back of the head. He jumped the first time and then was absolutely still when the second slug ripped through his useless brain. For all you thieves out there, don’t hold me up, or I’ll kill you.

Remember that this is your column, too, so that if you ever get off of your fat, lazy ass and get outside once in a while, you can write this column and save me some friggin time! Email your stories to nkatz230@uwsp.edu or I will personally come and kick your ass.

FED RESERVE BOARD

Have you seen one of the deer living in Schmeekle lately? Well, if you haven’t, you’re in for a big surprise. Apparently they’ve been tak­ing advantage of being in college more than most people on camp­us.

First of all, these deer have suddenly taken to caring about their looks. Case in point, those real nice looking yellow collars. Speaking of collars, how did those varmints get a hold of real material things?

Either they learned how to make ’em themselves, or they went out and bought ’em.

They must have a lot more control over those hooves than we thought.

I don’t even like to think about this, it gets my blood going and belly churning, but maybe those treehuggin’ freaks gave them to the deer as presents. People have no idea how far this education stuff has gone.

Many students have reported overhearing some of the real smart ones speaking pidgin En­GLISH. Apparently these deer have acquired a taste for marijuana. Numerous reports have filtered in of people in Schmeekle after dusk having their pot stolen.

“Last fall I was sitting on the hill relaxing with a couple of green buds when I heard somebody say ‘Give pipe! Give pipe!’ in a crazy high voice,” said drifter Max Karcheski.

“At first I thought it was just Ryan ‘cause he talks that way sometimes, but I turned around to see this spike buck smiling at me and holding out his hoof. I gave it to him and he took a hit, then took off with my favorite bowl. I’m telling you man, something weird is going on out there.”

General Rick Kickass, head of the student’s National Rifle As­sociation, cautions everyone, hunters especially, to be wary of a possible rebellion. “I tell you those conniving Democrats are in on this some­how!” screamed Kickass. “That dope-smokin’ Bill Clinton has somehow managed to educate these helpless animals to the point where we can’t just shoot them like we’re in a shooting gal­lery.

“This is a blatant attempt to end our God given Constitutional right to shoot things by educat­ing wildlife to organize their own revolts.”

“Millions of human lives will be in danger if someone doesn’t put a stop to this soon,” he added.

They’re smarter than they look

If you’re walking through the woods in Schmeekle and encounter one of these deer, make sure that you run the other way, or else they may chase you, asking “Got any smoky smokery?”

Fitzgerald signs on as QB with Packers

By Fuzzy Navell

With the recent retirements of Keith Jackson and Jim McMahon and the departure of Andre Rison, the World Champion Green Bay Packers may have dropped them­selves down a notch.

But the Packers made a big move on Wednesday night to bolster their club by announcing the signing of former Quarter­back Tom Fitzgerald.

The senior from Spooner was currently playing professionally in Sweden when he got a phone call from Packer General Manager Ron Wolf.

Green Bay used a little known rule that allows NFL teams to sign Division III players even before next weekend's upcoming draft.

"Mel Kiper Jr. was projecting me as a third or fourth-round pick in the draft, but I've been a Packer fan my whole life and I wanted to make sure I ended up there," said Fitzgerald.

When asked about the sign­ing, Green Bay coach Mike Holmgren was elated.

"Fitz is the guy we've liked all year," said Coach Marty "The Mauler" Loy. Others involved in the college combine know it will not be that easy.

The wrestlers that survive the smart quarters, through a turnbuckle, or smashing their opponent's puny little heads in a steel cage, yelled the ring.

"Yes it's true, I have some­what of a checkered past, but I have overcome many obstacles in my life. I want to live out my boyhood dream," Georgie gleefully giggled.

"After struggling with numer­ous injuries as an assistant water boy on the Spring Valley Plucked Chickens, the Chancellor was forced to retire."
NHL’s Whalers moving to Stevens Point

By Adam Bomm

SILENT BUT DEADLY

The Hartford Whalers stunned the National Hockey League world Tuesday morning, announcing Stevens Point as the franchise’s new home.

Whalers owner Peter Karmanos held a press conference at Goerke Field, the site where the new hockey arena will be built to house the team.

The Whalers announced their intent to leave Hartford last week due to the lack of fan support and money for a new building.

The cities originally proposed for the Whalers new location included Columbus, Ohio and Minneapolis, Minn.

Columbus was turned down because an NHL team is moving there next year, and Minneapolis was granted an expansion franchise for the 1998-99 NHL season.

"Since Wisconsin doesn’t have an NHL team, we thought this would be an ideal place to start up a fan base," Karmanos said.

"Besides, Milwaukee has the Admirals, and the location of Central Wisconsin allows us to bring fans from the entire state," Karmanos added.

The Stevens Point Common Council met Monday night, passing a referendum calling for a new 12,000-seat arena to be built where Goerke Field is now.

"With the help of 90 million dollars from the Whalers, we’ll be able to build a top-notch NHL facility," said Maj. Mary Wescott, mayor of the Whalers’ home town.

"Stevens Point is an ideal place to start over in. Hopefully fans will support us as much as they support the Packers," Whalers star forward Keith Primeau said.

"It’ll be great to be able to play in an NHL arena for most of our games. Plus, our team can gain valuable experience from the Whalers’ players," UW-SP hockey coach Joe Baldarotta said.

Demolition of Goerke Field begins this weekend, and the new arena will be complete by the start of the 1997-98 season.

The Pointer hockey team will play a minimal amount of games at K.B. Willett Arena with the arrival of the Whalers’ new arena.

"We hope we can gather huge fan support, because the Hartford Whalers are America’s Team in the NHL," Karmanos said.

Bucks hope Dudley exerices free-agent option

By Hugh Lowring

The Milwaukee Bucks, in order to bolster their roster with another proven big man, have expressed great interest in Portland Trailblazers center Chris Dudley.

Dudley, who is in the fifth year of a six year 24 million dollar deal with the Blazers, is expected to exercise an option in his contract to become a free agent at the end of the 1996-97 season.

"If Chris does become a free agent, he will be our top priority during this offseason," Milwaukee Bucks general manager Mike Dunleavy said.

"He can fill a huge void in the middle for us and would be worth every penny we pay him," Dunleavy added.

Dudley’s skills will come at a very steep price because he could be the only experienced center on the market.

With the Detroit Pistons among the many other teams looking for a center for next season, Dudley will likely command a contract bigger than his current one.

Bucks coach Chris Ford also expressed his interest in Dudley’s services for a possible journey to the NBA play-offs next season.

We need the type of center that the Bucks had when they were in playoffs in the 1980’s," Ford said.

President Eyabane, the ruler of Togo, was unavailable for comment, although sources have seen him "sippin’ on margaritas in Cancun."

Rodman has painted his hair gold and blue to commemorate the joyous occasion of having a new populace to cater to his antics.

Jordan simply asked “can I do endorsements over there?”

Pippen refused to comment, choosing instead to hide in Jordan’s shadow during the course of the interview.

Commissioner David Stern chastised Reinsdorf, but decided that he would just suspend Rodman for “the hell of it.”
Favre’s ‘Super’ jock brings in big bucks

By Jean Kloning
Sheep Herder

Those who question the degree of loyalty displayed by the Green Bay Packer faithful will most likely ponder the rationale used by a Waupaca man last Sunday afternoon at a sports auction in Green Bay.

Ted Klondowski, 49, shelled out $8300 for a jock strap worn by Brett Favre during January’s Super Bowl game.

Klondowski outbid actor Charlie Sheen, known for acquiring sports memorabilia at outrageous prices, to bring home the bizarre item.

When asked why Favre’s undergarment caught his eye enough to drop that sort of money, Klondowski defended the purchase.

Brett Favre's jock strap from Super Bowl XXXI was grabbed for $8300 at an auction.

“I think it’s pretty funny myself,” said a smiling Favre. “Some may question why I would want to sell my jock. But if someone offered you $8300 for an athletic supporter, wouldn’t you part with it?”

Favre may not have been interested in displaying the article, but Klondowski claims he’ll have to rearrange the numerous bowl trophies currently occupying his mantle to make room for his newfound prize possession.

Centertainment’s Beyond 3000 linked to peace lovin’ cult

“Know the magic of the bongo will make everything happy,” explained Flower Bark.

Some of the half-witted members believe that everyone is in tune with “the voice” and therefore wishes to partake in the cult’s activities, namely listening to the bongos.

Members are encouraged to dress differently when going to parties in order to draw attention to themselves and to recruit new members.

While this cult seems completely harmless and easy going, the public is advised to wear ear plugs during the extended bongo playing, since the players are unaware of some people’s low tolerance for long periods of loud noise.

Students’ faces paralyzed for life

Candy Kane and Cookie Krisp are victims of their own malice. The victims suffer from facial paralysis after years of mocking others. (Photo conceived)

By Sassy Cindy
ASSISTANT FEATURES EDITOR

Last Monday two students left Health Services with daunting news. Both were diagnosed with facial paralysis after years of mocking people.

The dismayed duo placed blame on the beer at the house party they attended Saturday night.

“Mu face gat all camped up. I sweared wa de beer. The bas was preedy strange,” mumbled Candy Kane, UW-Stevens’Point junior, while struggling to answer.

“I don’t think it was the alcohol,” claimed Nancy Nickerbacker RN, of Health Services.

“It was high time those girls learned a lesson or two about making fun of others.”

As young girls, Kane and Cookie Krisp were notoriously known as the mocking snots of East High School.

Classmates from grade school remember the face making sessions Kane and Krisp conducted.

“I always sucked up to them so they wouldn’t make fun of me. Boy was I stupid,” remembered classmate Steve Kissass.

The girls claim that they were not making fun of anyone, but other partygoers disagree.

“Candy and Cookie get their kicks making fun of other girls. They can be such bitches, especially when they get a couple beers in them,” explained Donny Wahberg.

A brief interview with Mrs. Krisp attested to Cookie’s paralysis dilemma.

“I’ve told Cookie for years that she had to stop making faces or it would stay permanently.”

The victims suffer from facial paralysis.

“Such a beautiful day and said ‘yeah right mom.’”

“Well, I guess not all moms are as stupid as kids like to believe,” she explained.

Studies about face paralysis are currently taking place at the University of Kansas Topeka.

Doctor Alan Facial wants the girls to be his experimental subjects.

“They would be somewhat compensated, and may even get their faces back to normal,” he said.

While the girls are not looking forward to hanging out in flat land Topeka, they hope to regain their faces and composure.

“I do not deserve my paralysis. My mum wa wong. It was da beer,” Krisp said with much effort.

The terrible duo will not be missed. Friends and family bid a fond farewell to Krisp and Kane late last night as they boarded the midnight train to Topeka.

From my experience, “Show me the money” works pretty well.

How do you feel when people say you can’t handle the truth about underage drinking on campus? Wally Wasted, Junior

I want answers; I want the truth.

How do you feel about students taking an average of five years to graduate? Diana DoLittle, Senior

I feel the need, the need for speed ... ah ... that is to get the students out into the work force quicker.

What was your job experience prior to becoming chancellor? Wanda Wannabe, Sophomore

Chancellor caught in the act
George bares all at nightclub

By Loose Cannon
DONOR

An inside source for The Pointer reportedly saw Chancellor George in drag at Zeta's, a Green Bay establishment, on the evening of April 1.

Chancellor George was wearing green spike heels, an orange feather boa, mini skirt, and pearl earrings with a matching necklace.

In addition, George had on a platinum blonde wig to disguise himself from patrons who might have noticed him as UW-Stevens Point Chancellor.

"I saw him dancing on top of the bar and I almost died. I had to do a double take when he started stripping to Abba's Song. Dancing Queen," said the inside source.

Furthermore, a bartender for the establishment reported that the Chancellor was sucking down Mai Tai's like they were going out of style.

The bartender also confirmed the little strip show the Chancellor performed for the club.

"Yeah, he was really wasted after his tenth Mai Tai. I know I wasn't going to serve him anymore once he started flinging his clothes off and mooning the patrons," said the bartender.

After the Chancellor was dragged off of the bar, kicking and screaming, he ran to the dance floor where he burst out in song.

George was screaming out the lyrics from the hit television series The Brady Bunch.

The inside source had this to say about the Chancellor's little scene.

"I couldn't believe it...people just loved it. Everyone crowded around him in a circle and joined in."

"I thought it was hysterical, but everybody thought it was abso-lutely fabulous! Hell, I had to give him credit, he (Chancellor George) lasted through the whole song before he passed out on the floor."

Chancellor George was unavailable for comment on the incident. However, a nearby neighbor of George's reported that his (George's) car was not home the night of the little escapade.

The Pointer's inside source promises to keep the university posted with any additional information.

Ranger's film has the Power

By Billy Stevens

I don't know if you've seen some of the movies that won Academy Awards for last year, but they pale in comparison to the sweeping epic that is Turbo Power Rangers.

Never before have I seen such depth of character, plot, and such stunning special effects. The time that it must have taken to come up with such an original story idea, find these stunningly talented actors and put this film to print is mind-boggling.

I'd like to analyze for you the dominant parts of this film, which include the plot, and performances by Jason David Frank and Johnny Yong Bosch, playing the red and green Power Rangers, respectively.

First, let's summarize the amazing plot. Basically, the Rangers must help Lerigot, the kindly wizard from Liaria, who holds the only golden key that can release the god Maligore from his volcanic prison, from being captured by Divatox. Whew! Just writing that genius makes me sweat.

Jason David Frank plays the role of his life in this film. His character is deep, tough yet empathetic, and he delivers one line with such passion- "Turbo Power Rangers form megazords!" I'll tell you, that gave me the goosebumps.

Filling in at supporting actor was Johnny Yong Bosch, who stuns the audience with leaps and one-liners that make my skin creep with ecstasy. Expect this film to sweep the Oscars next year.

From High Honors to Hookers (1991; 1hr. 9min.)

What "Citizen Kane" is to dramatic genre, "From High Honors to Hookers" is every bit as much to the soft pornographic scene.

It is the timeless story of two straight 'A' high school seniors who trade in full scholarships to Harvard for the glamorous and well-paying life of a Hollywood call girl.

Only six years old and already a classic of its kind, the film that reinvented the sex-in-film brought to life unforgettable one liners such as "Oooooooh," and "Hit it big daddy."

Ron Jeremy protege Tank Johnson delivers the performance of his career in one of his earlier offbroadway roles. Eileen Entuit follows Johnson's lead with a touching premiere performance.

The soundtrack is also an all-time favorite.

Tracing Dinosaur Jr.'s footsteps

By Patrick McGrane

There is an amazing amount of dis-information being sent out about the group Dinosaur Jr.-false truths that are accepted by the radio listener with little thought as to their validity. I'm here to set the record straight.

For instance many think their new album, "Hand it Over," is their tenth effort and prior to 1985 the band did not exist. This is unfortunate and has served to remove an important element of natural history from the impressionable minds of America's youth.

The truth of the matter lies in their name-which implies some sort of junior to the prehistoric beasts that once roamed the earth millions of years ago.

The lead singer's name, J. Mascis is a take off from the name of the beheamath carnissaur: Jexosaurus Mascissius, which roamed ancient Pangea through-out most of the Triassic period.

Studies of fossilized vocal chords of J. Mascissius indicate that it produced a roar quite similar in sound to the tube-overdriven scream of a stratacaster played at full volume.

The sonic feedback experimentalism favored by the band is a poor attempt at mimicking the same powerful roar.

So next time you hear Dinosaur Jr. blasting from your speakers, think of Barney's big brother and imagine that sonic blast coming from his lungs.
